How to find the secret of Schhh blindfold

(if it's that kind of party)

To find a bottle of Tonic Water which contains the secret of Schhh, you have simply to follow the clues provided by You-Know-Who. Most are for your eyes only. Raise the bottle to the light to detect the delicate blue suffusion. Watch for the wisp of potency as you flick off the lid. And when you add this Tonic to gin or vodka, observe how it detonates the passive spirit.

But what if the lights are dimmed 'for the Party'? Or if playfully sinister fingers close over your eyes? Or a silken bandage is knotted behind your head? Must you then risk a surprise for your palate? Never! You-Know-Who foresaw even this. They embossed the final clue round each bottle's base. Trace it with your finger - S . . . C . . . H . . . That's enough. Now drink to your success.

JOSEPHINE BLAKE (above) Pigalle, 196 Piccadilly, W1 (REG 6423). "I love dancing. A fast modern routine makes any worries I may have disappear", says Josephine. So its worry-free evenings for the tall, long-legged blonde who sings and dances in the Pigalle floorshow. One of her numbers is a moody piece about London, another a zippy routine in a discotheque setting. "I was always the dreamy one at school, staring out of the window imagining myself a ballerina, but it was soon obvious I was going to be too tall for ballet". She has been able to explore her talents on the stage (in How To Succeed in Business), on television (Not So Much a Programme) and in films

A misprint like the one on the right may lead a label collector to extravagance. But the bottle on the left is as valuable. It's the contents that count. Ambassadeur. The aperitif from Cusenier. You can buy it here, now. Get a bottle. Open it up. Pour some into a glass. Then taste it. That's all we're saying. You've just got to taste it. You can label the bottle how you choose. But you can't label the drink. Ambassadeur's unique—unique unique. P.S Just because it's an aperitif, don't think you can't drink it after dinner. An Ambassadeur has diplomatic immunity.

Restaurants

Selective restaurant guide especially compiled by Neil Rhind, Editorial Manager of the Good Food Club. The Club's Good Food Guide (published by Consumers' Association and Cassell) has 1,600 entries covering the whole country. In this weekly section London Life will list and describe most of the reputable London restaurants in the course of the year. The name of the proprietor, where given, follows immediately after the telephone number. C.S. = Closed Sundays

W 1

BENTLEY'S, 11 Swallow St, off Piccadilly, W 1 (REG 6210). W A. D J and R G Bentley. Dinner 5.30-11. C.S. Now is the time to go to Bentley's. Because there is an R in the month and because Bentley's have their own oyster beds. They also have an Oyster Bar where they will sell oysters to you from 12s to 17s 6d the half-dozen. In the bar and the upstairs restaurant there are other sorts of fish and shellfish from about 10s 6d to 25s. The lobster bisque (5s) is very good. Wines from about 20s; some by the glass. Black Velvet, draught Guinness, of course

CRANK'S SALAD TABLE, 22 Carnaby St, W 1 (GER 9431). Daphne Swan, K and D Canter. Meals served continuously from 10 a.m.-8.30 p.m. Closed Sat & Sun. If you buy your clothes in Carnaby Street, and even if you don't, Crank's pure foods restaurant is a splendid place for lunch. All vegetarian: home-made soups, fresh and imaginative salads (a selection from 3s 6d to 6s 6d), and an excellent selection of cheeses. Some rather original sweets and cakes. Dandelion as well as Cona coffee, and though some of the other drinks have pretty strange names, none are alcoholic. You should be able to eat quite well for 7s 6d. Afterthoughts: tipping is discouraged and the tinned music isn't pop

THE DIPLOMAT, 20 Mount St, W 1 (MAY 3200). Manager: Charles Bradshaw. Dinner 7-11.45. This is Guy Gluckstein's new prestige restaurant, which he has designed to give you the finest food in as fine a setting as possible. The decor isn't to everybody's taste, and whether they achieve their aim with the food only time (and our pockets) can tell. Prices start at 30s for a three course table d'hôte, the cost of your meal being determined solely on the price of the main dish chosen. Only oysters and caviar are charged extra. Wines carefully chosen and priced to match the menu.

GAY HUSSAR, 2 Greek St, W 1 (GER 0973). Victor Sassie. Dinner 6.30-11. C.S. According to some expatriates this is the most authentic Hungarian restaurant we have in London, even though the menu has dishes from other parts of central and eastern Europe. The Hungarian hors-d'oeuvre (6s 6d), Bulgarian mixed salad (4s), the various pancakes (about 10s 6d) and the pork chops with green peppers and cream should make a change from scampi and fillet steak. There is a very good value 10s 6d table d'hôte lunch. Wines by the carafe 12s 6d; glass 3s

MARTINEZ SPANISH RESTAURANT, 25 New Bond St, W 1 (REG 5066 & 4921). F Amhurst. Dinner 6-midnight. The Martinez is one of the few really authentic Spanish restaurants in London, and some dedicated lovers of Spain think the decor is as realistic as the food. It is sensible to eat the Iberian specialties: paella Valenciana (15s 6d), cold gazpacho (4s), inkfish in their own ink (8s 6d). Long list of sherries from 3s 6d, and Spanish wines from 16s; in carafes for 18s 6d, by the glass 3s

AU SAVARIN, 8 Charlotte St, W 1 (MUS 7134). Mr Chris, Mr Theo. Dinner 6-11. C.S. The cost of a meal here won't be small but it will be good value. The menu is large, the cooking good, and the helpings more than enough for normal people. The pâté (5s 6d), scampi Provençale and taramosalata (4s 6d) are good to begin with. Follow them with escalopes (Au Savarin or Bel Paese 10s 6d), or the kidneys in red wine. Good sweet trolley. The wine list is not very cheap; it does include 10 Greek wines from 22s 6d, if you have acquired the taste for these; others by the carafe for 15s, by the glass 4s 6d

TINKER'S FARE, 8 Mill St, W 1 (MAY 8947). Meals served from 11.45-5 p.m. A very smart, friendly and inexpensive place for a quick, light lunch, but interesting enough in its cooking to make it a place to go out of your way for. The crab salad with home-made mayonnaise (5s), prawn & fish casserole (4s), kidneys in brandy sauce with noodles (5s), and the cheese salé (cheese pie with salad, 4s) are all very enjoyable. Apricot shortbread pie (1s 9d) and the plum soufflé cream (1s 6d) are excellent sweets. Licensed: 8 wines by the glass (2s 6d)

W 2

LE MIGNON, 2 Queensway, W 2 (BAY 0093). Mrs. M Pincus. Dinner 6-midnight. C.M. The authentic Hungarian touches here include a Gipsy orchestra to entertain you in the evenings. Home-made brown with onions and paprika (3s), goulash with rice or noodles (9s 6d), chicken Hongroise (9s 6d), fantanyeros (29s for 2) served in big helpings. Fifty wines including some estate-bottled Hungarian items; by the glass 3s and 3s 6d

W 4

CITY BARGE, Strand-on-the-Green, Chiswick, W 4 (CHI 2148 & 8649). Manager E Townsend. Lunch only 12.30-2.30. Closed Sat & Sun. You can sit outside the City Barge, on the towpath, and watch the river go by as you drink. Inside, at lunchtime, the dining room offers a short menu of freshly-cooked reasonably priced food: the mussels in butter, served with lettuce and brown bread (6s 6d) is a good thing to have before a steak (9s 6d), or more interestingly, the calves kidneys curried in white wine with rice (9s 6d). Licensed: choice of 10 wines by the glass from 2s 3d

W 5

EALING TECHNICAL COLLEGE CATERING SCHOOL, St Mary's Rd, W 5 (EAL 0162). Principal: Mr Ceserani. Lunch M to F only, during term time. This is not a commercial enterprise; it is a practical demonstration of the lessons the students of the Catering School have learnt in the classroom. A 3-course lunch costs as little as 7s 6d (4-course 10s), and its range and quality will depend on the academic level reached by the class being taught that day. Remember you are acting as a guinea-pig and forgive the occasional mistake which may sometimes occur in the service. It is necessary to book

BEOTY'S, 14 Wright's Lane, W 8 (WES 8525). T Frangos. Dinner 5.30-11. C.S. This is the parent of the Beoty's in St Martin's Lane. One of its attractions is that it has a balcony which is one of the few places in London where you can eat out of doors. Similarly Greek in character: at this branch try the taramosalata (a pâté of cod roes), Cyprus stefado, or the pillaf de poulet à la Grecque. The prices are also similar. Greek wines from 14s 6d, carafes of retzina 18s

TUN OF PORT, 31b Holland St, W 8 (WES 9277). Bill Sykes. Dinner only 7-midnight. C.S. Despite the proprietor's name this is not a Dickensian restaurant—far from it. The menu and decor suggest a less inhibited century, but all this doesn't seem quite so shocking any more. Don't go here for a quick supper but devote your whole evening to the fondue Bourguignonne (15s), wine merchant's fillet (14s) or the fish pie. The cheese and a free glass of port is very good value. Licensed: wine in carafes 11s 6d

W 12

ODDI'S RISTORANTE ITALIANO, 11 Goldhawk Rd, W 12 (SHE 4996). N Oddi. Dinner 5.45-11 (midnight Fri & Sat). This is a clean, attractive little restaurant much used by the people from Lime Grove. The melon with Parma ham (6s 6d), featto alla veneziana with vegetables (6s 6d), scallopine alla Marsala (7s) are all tremendous value and would shame many of the much more expensive Italian restaurants nearer the West End. Licensed: mostly Italian wines from 12s 6d

W 14

THE BELVEDERE, Holland House, Holland Park, W 14 (WES 4641). J Lyons & Co. Dinner 6-11.30 (Sun 6.30-11). How pleasing it is to report on a restaurant in a London park where the food isn't terrible. This park setting—floodlit gardens and peacocks—is worth going to see just on its own. Terrine de gibier (6s 6d) and the suprême de volaille aux champignons (13s 6d) have already found favour. Free chocolates with your coffee. Licensed: a good Macon 18s 6d

SW 1

LE BEURRE FONDU, 1-3 Wilbraham Pl, SW 1 (SLO 6321). Rawles Ltd. Dinner 6-10. C.S. This is part of the Wilbraham Hotel, and has oak-paneling and a 2 sq ft of menu. There is a table d'hôte menu for 14s 6d (lunch) and 19s 6d (dinner) which is changed every day; the à la carte menu is internationally ambitious. Some wines under £1, and there are small 4s glasses

LE MATELOT, 49 Elizabeth St, Eaton Square, SW 1 (SLO 1038). Hilary James. Dinner 6.30-11.30. C.S. A small informal restaurant with a Provençal bias to the menu: ratatouille (3s 6d), brochette de scampi Provençale, with vegetables (15s), ris de veau Matelet (15s) and planked steak (17s 6d). Short wine list from 13s; by the glass 3s 6d

POLONIA, 27 Grosvenor Gdns, SW 1 (VIC 4614 & 6759). Mr Belks. Meals served 11 a.m.-10 p.m. This is a simple restaurant but it has a varied range of dishes, and as the main dishes include two vegetables the value is remarkably good. Begin with the hors d'œuvre de luxe (5s 6d), or eggs Florentine (5s), and for the next course boiled chicken (7s 6d), Vienna schnitzel (7s 6d) or tripe Polish style (6s 6d). Wines by the glass 2s 6d to 3s; large range of bottled beers including some from Poland

MAISON PRUNIER, 72 St James's St, SW 1 (HUD 1373). Mme Prunier. Dinner & supper 5.45-11.30. Probably one of the best fish restaurants in the world, also very expensive. The menu is long and it would be foolish to try and signal any of the dishes as better than the others. There is virtually nothing that comes from the sea that cannot be had in some form or other. Hard-up gastronomes can have a pre-theatre dinner (5.45-7 p.m) for 27s 6d. Licensed: long wine list, carafes 23s

LE CARROSSE, 19 Elystan St, SW 3 (KNI 5248). Geoffrey Sharp. Dinners only 7-11.30. C.S. This is an attractive, pleasant place and sensibly limits its menu, and does what it does do very well and with some individuality. Basically French but sufficiently cosmopolitan to offer lemon soup (4s), poulet Albufera with wild rice (14s 6d) and lamb cutlets Shrewsbury with a piquant sauce (12s 6d). Try the crème brûlée (6s) or brandy snaps Chantilly (4s 6d) afterwards. Wines by the carafe 14s; by the glass 3s 6d

AU FIN BEC, 100 Draycott Av, SW 3 (KNI 3600). Mr Corti. Dinner 7.30-11. C.S. If you have strong objections to seeing your food being prepared and cooked, then this small French restaurant is not for you, for only a green glass window is between you and the kitchen. The 12s 6d table d'hôte at lunch is good value; the à la carte is limited to their own specialities (ask them what's on): oeufs Bénédicte (5s 6d), sole Grand Duc (14s 6d) suprême de volaille à l'estragon (14s 6d) and other things have been "on" in the recent past. A short well-chosen wine list; carafes 18s, 9s 6d the half; by the glass 4s 6d

MINOTAUR, Chelsea Cloisters, Sloane Avenue, SW 3 (KNI 8608). Joseph & Martin. Dinner 7-11.30. C.S. The Minotaur started life as a steakhouse and will be found, appropriately enough, beneath a labyrinthine block of flats. Now it has been turned into a French restaurant by the proprietors of the Genevieve, and has established a firm reputation for sound bourgeois cooking. Try the moules marinière (6s 6d), tripes à la Milanaise (10s), rognons de veau à la moutarde de Dijon (12s 6d). Licensed: wine by the glass 3s 6d son, J L Chamberlain, Beecher Moore. Dinner only 7.30-11.30. C.S. Many people think this is the finest restaurant in London. It certainly takes a lot of beating and I wouldn't like to be asked to name its nearest rival. Tom Benson took over as chef when Ray Parkes died, and has carried on the restaurant's tradition with exceptional originality and distinction. You pay £3 for a four-course table d'hôte meal which may include sweet-breads with cognac, mussels in a mustard soup, baby turkey with cherries and chestnuts, a salad with Roquefort pâté, and finish with a peach filled with lemon sorbet. The service is good, the wine list small and rather dear. You will certainly have a memorable meal. You must book well in advance

PARKES, 4 Beauchamp Pl, SW 3 (KEN 1390). Tom Ben-

UNITY RESTAURANT, 91 King's Rd, SW 3 (FLA 1379). Mr Alexleou. Dinner 6-10.45. C.S. The Unity has been serving Greek food to the inhabitants of Chelsea for more than 15 years, and has managed to survive the competition from all the new bistros and eating boutiques. Dolmadakia (3s 6d), kebab (9s 6d), moussaka (9s 6d) are most reliable and excellent value. Licensed: retzina 15s; Cyprus wines from 12s 6d; by the glass 3s. The service is good

ZIA TERESA, 6 Hans Rd, SW 3 (KEN 7634). Dinner 5.30-11. A splendid, inexpensive and busy restaurant with eager service and very good cooking. The pizza pies, pastas, polpettine (6s 6d), osso buco (9s 9d), and the escalopes (from 7s 6d) are highly reliable. Sweets and coffee good. Moderately priced wine list; carafes of Chianti, by the glass 2s 6d

SW 5

SRI LANKA, 19 Childs St, SW 5 (FRE 4116). J C Silva. Meals 12-3; 6-midnight; Sat & Sun noon to midnight. Ceylonese food outside Ceylon is rare, and Sri Lanka is possibly Europe's only example of a Ceylonese restaurant. The dishes are Indian-sounding in name, and have a slightly milder taste, but it is still worth asking the waiter to suggest a meal rather than flounder helplessly with the wrong sort of mixtures. You might like to start with the risam (clear pepper soup 1s 6d), then hakam mas (a beef curry 5s 6d), badapu isso (fried prawns 7s) or pittu fish (7s), with this you can have hot fried onion sambal or the milder pol sambala, both 1s 6d. Kiri saha pani (curd with honey) for pudding. All wines under 22s 6d; by the glass 3s. Joss-sticks and candlelight

SW 10

NICK'S DINER, 88 Ifield Rd SW 10 (FLA 0930). Dinner only, 7-midnight. C.S. This is a bistro, though in its time it has been the English equivalent, a transport café. Now the proprietor and his chef offer an unusual and often-changing menu which might include grilled fresh sardines with French mustard (7s 6d), poussin corsaire, croustades d'escargots (7s 6d), and jugged hare (12s 6d). Short, high-priced wine list: 1 litre carafes 12s 6d. From the outside, this looks like a private house and you have to ring for admittance

OUZEL GALLEY, 6 Hollywood Rd, SW 10 (FLA 3500). Robert Coville. Dinner only.

Salerooms

7.30-midnight. This is a nice sort of amateur place that gives very professional cooking. Lithographs of old ships and green baize walls can't be eaten of course, but they make a pleasant setting for sorrel soup (4s 6d), venison with red-currant jelly and chestnut purée (11s 6d) and lemon sorbet (3s 6d). Chicken Kiev, jugged hare and fresh fruit salad for less adventurous eaters. Licensed

SW 19

LE CAFE ROYAL, 72 High St, Wimbledon, SW 19 (WIM 0238). M. Rampoldi. Dinner 6-10.30. M. Rampoldi offers Wimbledon residents Soho cooking at little more than Soho prices, and they ought to be grateful to him. His home-made pâté (4s 6d), avocado pear with prawns (4s 6d), and minestrone (2s 6d) are reliable starters. Chicken Christina (12s 6d) and the caneton à la Grand Marnier are good eating from the list of specialities called "plats des gourmets." Licensed: wines rather dear

WC 2

BEOTY'S, 79 St Martin's Lane, WC 2 (TEM 8548 & 8763). T. Frangos. Dinner 5.30-midnight. C.S. This elegant and friendly restaurant is ideal for a pre-theatre dinner. The cuisine is mainly Greek, the choice unlimited, and the service friendly. Licensed: Greek wines from 14s 6d; carafes of tsina 15s

NAG'S HEAD, 10 James St, WC 2 (TEM 4678). Mr M. Cox. Dinner 5.30-11. C.S. Having recommended somewhere to eat near Sadler's Wells it is only right to mention this famous pub, with its theatrical decor, near Covent Garden. Start dinner early enough for you to dine before the curtain goes up. They will try to feed you in time. The food is plain: sole, trout, duck, chicken and grills from about 6s to 15s. Beer on tap; wine by the glass 3s. Not an outstanding place, but very useful

N 1

PORTOFINO, 39 Camden Passage, Islington, N 1 (CAN 0884). Enrico Aquilino. Dinner 6-midnight. C.S. A trattoria in a narrow passage containing a colony of antique shops. In decent weather you can lunch on the pavement, and it is useful for a candlelit dinner (if you like that sort of thing) after the opera at Sadler's Wells. Canarini (5s 6d), chicken Sorpresa (6s 6d), veal Pizzaloo (9s 6d) are the things to order; the osso buco (8s) will repay investigation. Liqueur-filled gateaux for afters. Carafes of red and white Chianti for 12s 6d; by the glass 3s

N 3

OTELLO RESTAURANT, 241 Regent's Park Rd, N 3 (FIN 5232). Dinner 6-11. This was once a tea-room, but it has now been turned into a friendly and successful Italian restaurant. Minestrone, saltimbocca alla Romana (12s 6d), escalope Val d'Aosta (11s 6d), and the usual basic Italian menu. The amarena affogata (3s 6d) is an unusual sweet and worth investigation. Chianti on draught, by the carafe 12s 6d, by the glass 3s

EC 3

GEORGE AND VULTURE, 3 Castle Cornhill, EC 3 (HOP 8000 Ext 351). John Gardner (London) Ltd. Lunch only 12-3. Closed Sat and Sun. So many of the really old, or Dickensian, pubs in the City serve such beastly food that it makes a change to recommend one that doesn't. The specialty here, on Thursdays during the oyster season (now, in fact), is Pickwick Pudding, made with steak, kidney, oysters and a special seasoning. This is 10s 6d; other popular dishes are cheaper—steak (8s), chump chops (7s), mixed grill (7s 6d) and gammon rashers (8s 6d). Cheeses (the Stilton is good) and steamed puddings for afters. Rosé in carafe (9s 6d), quarter-bottles and named wines by the glass from 4s; Ind Cope on draught. The George gets very busy by 12.45, and bookings are taken only before 12.30 p.m.

E 1

BLOOM'S, 90 Whitechapel High St, Whitechapel E 1 (BIS 6001). Sidney Bloom. Meals from 11 a.m.-10 p.m. (M-Th); 11-1 p.m. (F); 11-midnight (Sun); closed Sat. Kosher food doesn't begin and end with salt beef though this is one of the dishes you ought to try at this bustling and cheerful restaurant. Bloom's is probably the best place in London for stuffed kishka (8s) and cholent (a sort of casserole with meat dumplings 9s 6d). The sweet and sour cabbage and the latkas (fried potato cakes) are rather nice. There are no bookings and it gets crowded, so go early and take your own wine

E 14

GOOD FRIENDS AND NEW FRIENDS, 139 & 185 Salmon La, Limehouse, E 14 (EAS 5541 & 3366). C. Cheung. Meals served from 12 noon to about 11 p.m. If you want Chinese food at its best and its most authentic you must be prepared to make the journey to Limehouse. It will be well worth the trouble. Give them notice and try such specialities as the whole steamed mullet, whole stuffed duck, Chinese cheese and sausage, and the extraordinary melon soup. Even the more mundane dishes are a gastronomic revelation. A meal of extreme variety and satisfying proportions will cost about 15s to £1 per head. No drinks; off-licence opposite Good Friends

SE 24

DANIA RESTAURANT, 293-5 Railton Rd, SE 24 (BRI 9163). V. Svenssen. Meals from midday to 11. C.S. There are few enough Scandinavian restaurants in this country, so even when one of those few isn't entirely Danish, but tends to offer chips with everything, it is still worth mentioning. Stick to the national dishes gaffelbitar (3s), hakkebøf (11s), chicken Silkeborg (12s 6d), or the frikadeller with special red cabbage (9s 6d). They do a Danish applecake with cream for 2s 9d, which is very good for sweet. Wines from 16s 6d, by the glass 3s 6d; Danish lagers, and aquavit (3s 6d) more sensible drinking

Above: "A Caprice with a Tower", an oil by Francesco Guardi and owned by Mr Francis Stonor. It is expected to fetch a five-figure price (Sotheby's, Wed 8 Dec)

Below: A rare Fabergé enamel and jewelled Easter Egg bonbonnière (Christie's, Wed 8 Dec)

Above: A tilting helmet, probably made in Augsburg between 1590 and 1540 (Sotheby's, Mon 6 Dec)

Right: A large Tuscan portrait albarello made during the late 15th century. It is expected to fetch between £1,500 and £2,000 (Sotheby's, Tues 7 Dec)

Why try to express the inexpressible when sapphires from Bensons will flash the message happily and keep flashing it ever after?
People with great things to say have been going to Bensons for well over two hundred years for the most beautiful jewellery and watches you can buy

just give her sapphires
from

Christmas double!

The look on children's faces, the fairy lights and tinselled trees, the family reunions, the food, the presents . . . Christmas is a special time – matched by special issues of The Illustrated London News and Holly Leaves. These two sumptuous numbers are full of colour and features that sum up Christmas in Britain. Every member of the family will enjoy reading them.

BUY THEM NOW 5/- EACH AT YOUR LOCAL NEWSAGEN

The Illustrated London News Christmas Number is not just a magazine made to look seasonal. It's a work of art in itself. It includes 24 pages of superlative colour, together with a front cover reproducing Canaletto's breathtaking painting of Westminster Abbey. The latter ties in with a feature written to mark the Abbey's 900th anniversary. Then there will be over seven pages of colour on Royalty as artists, with paintings by Queen Victoria, the daughters of George III, and the Duchesses of Kent and Gloucester; a feature on how artists over the centuries have painted the River Thames; colour features on the Iranian Crown Jewels and animals of the Antarctic.

Holly Leaves will have something to interest you whoever you are. In colour, there's a decorative arrangement of the Zodiac; two pages of specially commissioned paintings of pheasants, by Dr. Eric Ennion; a picture by Peter Biegel, the sporting artist, of the ride home after a day's hunting; a feature on Sussex church porches, and paintings of Joan of Arc, Herbertonford village in Devon, and the tinsel glamour of the Punch and Judy show. Black and white features include illustrated articles on the Witches of the North Country, Gamekeepers of the old days, Balloons and Airships, Engraved Glassware from the fourteenth to the nineteenth centuries, Thatching in East Anglia – and a Countryman's Quiz.

PERFECT PRESENTS Give your friends at home and abroad a present they will want to keep all through the year . . . the Christmas Numbers of The Illustrated London News and Holly Leaves. Place an order through your newsagent – or let us send them on your behalf, together with a special greetings card in your name. The cost is only 6/- per copy, including postage to any address in the world. Simply send your name and address and that of the recipient, with a covering cheque or postal order to: Illustrated Newspapers Ltd, Circulation Manager, Dept 9, Elm House 10-16 Elm Street, London, W.C.1. We will do the rest.

Even if your husband were a millionaire you'd probably be wearing Majorica pearls

If you were fabulously wealthy you'd have a real pearl necklace worth about £3000.

It would live in the bank — while you happily wore Majorica simulated pearls.

These marvellous simulated pearls have been known on the Continent for years. They are so perfect in lustre, so flawlessly iridescent, so glowingly 'alive' that only a real expert could be trusted to know them from the costliest pearls in the world.

This is why quite a number of very wealthy women choose Majorica when they put their oyster-made pearls into safe keeping—they know that no-one will recognise Majorica as reproductions!

And, what's more, Majorica are internationally guaranteed for five years. Prices from 5 gns.

HEAVY HINT DEPARTMENT

Try on Majorica, feel their beauty round your neck. Choose your favourite style—then, drop outsize hints about them to the man in your life. How delighted he'll be to surprise you with the very present you wanted most!

Why Evening People like you go for the enticingly gleaming taste of Beefeater gin.

Nothing in this fretful world brings Evening People so close to bliss as their evening Beefeater.

The silvery clink of ice . . . the enticingly gleaming taste; the swift blossoming of wit . . . the evening launched into orbit. That is what Beefeater does for Evening People's evenings.

How? you might ask.

Well, it's a secret really, but as it's you we'll lift the veil a little.

To pure grain London spirit and water from our very own spring (a perfectionist foible we happily admit to) we add fragrant juniper berries, coriander, angelica, Seville orange peel and other herbs and spices which, even now, fill our loft with scent.

Our recipe demands that we distil three times: another perfectionist touch which adds to the gleam of your Beefeater. To tell any more would be to flout our own Secrets Act, an Act which has remained unflouted these 140 years.

If you feel that your evenings, glittering though they are, lack something, it's probably because you don't welcome them with a Beefeater. Generations of Evening People have found that the enticingly gleaming taste of Beefeater is what sets the evenings aglow.

Why swim against the tide?

SAVOUR AN ENTICINGLY GLEAMING
BEEFEATER GIN THIS EVENING

Their separate personalities are as clearly defined as characters in a fairy tale: John the clever one, Paul the sweet one, George the quiet one and Ringo the holy fool. As these public images are rooted in a private reality, there seems little point in meeting the Beatles; social confrontation can only confirm the known and simple truth. Yet I was curious to talk to John Lennon and Paul McCartney, because it is as songwriters rather than as performers that the Beatles interest me most. When I met them both together, however, they gave an impenetrable performance – a double act, with John facetiously punning on clichés and Paul obligingly feeding him. The jokes were good, but no better than Beatle jokes on the cinema or television screens. Later, I had the chance of spending two hours alone with Paul at Brian Epstein's office. He was ready to talk about his music, and did so with the minimum of suspicion or self-consciousness. The sweet, in their desire to please, can be even more articulate than the clever.

John and I don't work on the Rodgers and Hart pattern, one doing music and one doing lyrics. He writes a whole song on his own, or I write a whole song on my own, or if we do a song together either he might do the words and I the music, or the other way round. John wrote I Feel Fine on his own, and Please Please Me and a lot more. What did I write on my own? Oh, World Without Love, Yesterday, Can't Buy Me Love, All My Loving, and quite a few others. Mine are normally a bit soppier than John's. That's because I am a bit soppier than John.

CLOSE-UP: PAUL McCARTNEY AS SONGWRITER BY FRANCIS WYNDHAM

"When I first met John he'd written the words to a skiffle song. It still had a skiffle sound, but he'd changed the words to 'Come and go with me, Down at the Penitentiary' or something like that. Then I did one, 'When I Lost My Little Girl', with the three chords I knew at the time. John was playing left-handed banjo then. We got out of that stage and worked out chords together. We used to play truant (tut-tut, what a bad example to the younger generation) and go to his house or to mine and mess about all afternoon. It was a great feeling of escape - we'd smoke, you see, and if we didn't have cigarettes we'd smoke tea in my Dad's pipe. It tasted terrible, but we felt manly doing it. I wrote a couple of songs. One was Love Me Do. It wasn't good but it was only a little bit worse than the kind of thing on the hit parade then.

"At that time all the people we really liked were American. Buddy Holly was the main one. And Elvis - in those days we were fantastic fans, but he's gone off a lot since and we don't much like his later stuff. (We took him up on that matter when we met him at Los Angeles.) And then we started latching on to most of the American hits of the time. Chuck Berry was a ridiculous favourite. Liverpool has always been a great place for the folksy thing - Ringo is ridiculously keen on Country and Western. Somebody you could say was Country and Western gone pop was Carl Perkins, who we really loved.

"Well, this big batch of songs - the summer holidays and truant batch - was our first. Then we started to write better songs. Instead of 'Love me Do, I'll Always be True', we started on lyrics like 'Lock me Away'... But everything we've done we get sick of. We've got some comedy songs on our new LP. There's one called Norwegian Wood - it goes 'She showed me a room, isn't it good, Norwegian wood... I sat on a rug, biding my time, drinking her wine, and then she said, it's time for bed... So I lit a fire, isn't it good, Norwegian wood'. It's something new for us. It's just we're a bit sick so we thought we'd write something funny.

I feel as though it's an interesting time just now. Because something's got to happen. There's got to be some kind of change.

It probably won't be drastic. But I think it's a good thing about us that we keep contradicting ourselves. I saw someone on TV asked what he wanted out of life, and he said 'a cosy rut'. To be in a cosy rut is about the sickest thing ever, I think. You can enjoy it, but what's the point of living in a cosy rut? We could stay in one now for ever, repeating our early hits, and if we did come up with something exciting we'd have to scrap it. When we played at the Cavern we wore leather jackets and we were rockers - and it was good. Then we got a manager and did melodic songs and put suits on. When we came back from Germany with suits on people said 'Oh, you've gone posh', and we lost a lot of people. But we gained more than we lost. The others didn't realise they would have got very sick of us. We'd never have lasted. You can't be singing 15-year-old songs at 20 because you don't think 15-year-old thoughts at 20 - a fact that escapes a lot of people. Then we got sick of suits and changed again. Oh, I don't mean 'This week the Beatles with the Philharmonic Orchestra' - it won't happen. We'll never be that big. Basically we're the same whatever happens - we just get influenced outwardly. I am a great believer in influencability (is that a word? Better look it up...)

"For example, John and I would like to do songs with just one note - the hardest things of all to write. You know what people used to say about abstract painting - that it was done by chimpanzees? Well, we used to think that about songs that weren't melodic. But melodic songs are in fact quite easy to write. To write a good song with just one note in it - like Long Tall Sally - is really very hard. It's the kind of thing we've wanted to do for some time. We get near it in The Word. That's a number on our new LP - another example of being bored by doing the same thing. This could be a Salvation Army song. The word is love, but it could be Jesus (it isn't, mind you, but it could be). 'It's so fine, it's sunshine, it's the word'. It's about nothing really, but it's about love. It's much more original than our old stuff, less obvious. 'Give the word a chance to say That the word is just the way' - and the organ comes in, just like the Sally Army.

"We use an organ too on the B side of our new single, We Can Work it Out. The middle eight is the best - it changes the beat to a waltz in the middle. The original arrangement was terrible, very skiffley. Then at the session George had the idea of splitting the beat completely - the words go on at double speed against the slow waltz music. You've got to excuse me because I haven't heard these new songs enough yet and they're still knocking me out. It sounds big-headed but I don't care.

"Listen to this one, Girl. John's been reading a book about pain and pleasure, about the idea behind Christianity - that to have pleasure you have to have pain. The book says that's all rubbish, it often happens that pain leads to pleasure but you don't have to have it, all that's a drag. So we've written a song about it, with I suppose a little bit of protest - though really we don't protest. Listen to John's breath on the word 'girl': we asked the engineer to put it on treble, so you get this huge intake of breath and it sounds just like a percussion instrument.

We had to write 14 songs for this new LP, plus two for the single. It's a question of value for money more than anything else - we want to do what we would have liked when we were record-buyers ourselves. A 14 track LP and a separate single is unheard of in the States - there you'd have 12 tracks, and the single would just be two numbers from the LP. They're not the same as English record people. It's not quite that they're unscrupulous, but they'll put the singles on the LP just to fill up. It's cheating anyhow, but the scene is different there. The kids in America can afford to buy an LP just for a few new tracks, but here they're more choosy.

"Did you see Robert Graves and Malcolm Muggeridge on TV? Graves said this thing about his poetry. He said he has to write it. In fact, he said it was a drag, but he has to. And I know what he means. But John and I want to go on writing songs. Writing a song which you think great is a great satisfaction. It's one of the principles of life, I think, doing something that you think satisfying. We started writing songs as a hobby, and we still do it as a hobby. It's become a very lucrative one, I know - but it's still a hobby.

"We'd be up at John's house, we'd just sit down, and if we'd done a song it was a fantastic feeling, just like a day's work, like you'd been to the office for a bit. This is why John and I want to get ourselves a bit more organized. If we wrote a song a day our rate of development would be so much more. If we have a day off now, we only do it if we've got to. A famous painter has got to paint but he's still knocking himself out doing it. We've reached that stage. We both want to do a million more things. You find out about a lot of instruments you didn't know already. A lot of people are doing it now - The Animals, Manfred Mann. We could have done Yesterday with a Philharmonic Orchestra and a lot of people would have come with us. Say we did a song a day, then we'd have too many. If we had more than we could handle we could put 14 of our best songs on one LP. We could go in any direction then. George Martin has done an orchestral arrangement of our songs. Some of them definitely grow by being played on different instruments. The best recording of one of our songs was Esther Phillips singing And I Love Him. Do you like coloured voices? Well, listen to that. She sings it, you see, that's the difference. I tried to sing that on the LP and couldn't for the life of me. Eric Burdon of The Animals said he never realised this was a good song till he heard Esther Phillips sing it. John and I could do an LP, say, with other people - just an orchestra playing them, new songs I mean. All these ideas which are just ideas at the moment could be great when we can put them into practice.

People like Donald Zec are stupid about our songs when they say they won't last. We've reached the point now that whether people like it or not they'll be played in ten years' time. I always feel silly saying our songs will last. What I'm trying to say is that they may not be marvellous but they're part of what's around at the moment. Zec belongs to the bigoted generation - the kind of person who'd have said to my Dad: 'Don't play jazz'.

"People like Leonard Bernstein have come up to us and said: 'Some of your songs are good'. I'd rather he liked them than Donald Zec. But it's no good trying to please everybody. Had we been frightened of what people said we'd never have put in something like that change of beat I mentioned - we've always followed our noses in things like that. And we do identify ourselves with our music. I don't mean exactly - some of the tragic songs about love are written when we're at our happiest. But they're still us. I'm sure Francis Bacon isn't like what his paintings look like - he'd be having a rough time if he was! It's generally what we feel that's gone into the songs - it doesn't have to be the words, it could be the beat or the melody - but it's what's happening at the moment.

"We're the world's biggest pinchers. But when you look at people like Handel and see what he pinched, there's nothing wrong in that. We pinch a sound here, a rhythm there - one day we wrote that Welsh song called There's a Welcome in the Hillside, actually wrote it! So we had to scrap that. For years John has been trying to write Moonlight in Vermont. On our first LP there's a complete pinch from an American song - I'd better not tell you which one. And the riff in I Feel Fine is also a complete pinch from somewhere. Then people hear the original song and say 'Oh, what a pinch from the Beatles!' This is what the Stones do a number of times. I don't see the harm in it. There's only a certain permutation of notes, and they've got to clash. We've got a sort of running game with the Stones to spot where we've each pinched things from. But you get pinching everywhere - in painting, in writing (you pinch things in your articles, don't you?), even in business probably: some fellow in an office will take a tip or two from The Plane-Makers . . . .

"Just because our records are played quite a lot, people think we started all these trends. We'd be the last to say we started the Dylan trend. We followed it. Like Beatle haircuts - we didn't start that. It just happened, and we were the first people to become well known with that haircut.

"England exploded, didn't it? I don't know when . . . In the old days, pop stars didn't smoke or swear, they wore gold lamé suits. And before John Osborne, nobody could say royalty was rubbish. Now it's all so down-to-earth it's getting stupid. And fashion, too. For a place like Woollards to do a great big exhibition "Made in England" - it couldn't have happened. England started to change and we were part of it, that's all. And the whole embarrassed thing about being a provincial is different now. We always felt funny when we first came to London about the North Country accent. In the old days we might have learnt to say 'funny', but we could go on saying 'foony'. It was the same with people like Albert Finney and Tom Courtenay. Now it has to happen in America. People in America are so like English people used to be. They liked us in America, but that's different - America has always been built up of phenomenons anyhow. Anything that's a great success, America has always taken to - unless it's Russian. Here you have to prove yourself more first.

"I'll be glad when it does level out completely. In a small way this kind of thing is almost as good as the industrial revolution. Things were probably a bit better for the industrial revolution in the long run. But this has been a bloodless revolution - a painless change. Nobody seems to have got hurt - except for the woman who wants to keep TV clean, and she's got to go anyhow. If it's bad, it will stop. At least it's happened. If it's wrong, I believe it never could have happened.

"Of course you get people now saying it's gone too far, they don't know where to go from here. But people who don't know what to do now are the ones who never did. So when there was a big sort of orgasm with one lot of people who wanted to get out of the rut, they went along with them. Then when the people who know what's happening (what a terrible expression, but you know what I mean), have a period of inactivity, they all do. But it's all still happening. Dylan has started so much. And The Who. They are the two great influences of 1965. They definitely started us thinking again - Dylan about lyrics, and The Who about backings, bigger feedback, that sort of thing. We had that feedback idea in I Feel Fine but The Who went further and made all kinds of weird new sounds. I suppose Donald Zec would say 'What would they do without amplifiers?' But that's as silly as saying 'If God wanted us to smoke, he'd have given us chimneys'. We haven't got chimneys, but we smoke - so what? What would the theatre be without a stage and make-up, or movies without the camera?

"We enjoyed making Help! more than Hard Day's Night, but looking back on the two I think Hard Day's Night was the better film. We knew we couldn't have another Hard Day's Night - and with the next one we want to do something even more different. Help! was great but it wasn't our film - we were sort of guest stars. I think everybody thought a little bit too grandly about Help! - all those glamorous locations. It was fun, but basically as an idea for a film it was a bit wrong.

I don't read as much as John does. My main thing is, I've got to be settled to read. The times I would read are on a holiday, or in bed at night. The other day I took John to the Times Bookshop. I'd been there before and bought a copy of The Emperor Jones signed by Eugene O'Neill which really knocked me out, and the fellow there showed me the original manuscript of Under Milk Wood. The great thing about the Times Bookshop is that nobody's going to bother about who you are. Well, John spent an hour there, and £150. It was a good day for the Times Bookshop and a good day for John. And painting, too: I keep meaning to get hold of someone good and commission them. It's the obvious thing to do at this stage. But there's a lot of things in life I want to sort out first, and then when I've got something different going I'd like to do something like that.

"Writing songs and performing are equally rewarding - that is, when it goes well. But the songwriting thing looks like being the only thing you could do at 60. I wouldn't mind being a white-haired old man writing songs, but I'd hate to be a white-haired old Beatle at the Empress Stadium, playing for people.

The new Beatles LP, Rubber Soul, will be released on 10 December. It contains 12 numbers written by John Lennon and Paul McCartney, and 2 by George Harrison. The Beatles are appearing at the Odeon, Hammersmith, on 10 December and at the Astoria, Finsbury Park, on 11 December.

THE POWER BEHIND THE POWER GAME

Encouraged by the immense success of The Plane Makers, undaunted by the mixed reception of Front Page Story (you had to have experience of Fleet Street, it seems, to believe entirely in the bizarre infighting it depicted), ATV starts another series about the struggle for power on 13 December.

The Power Game will continue to chronicle the career of John Wilder (now Sir John), played again by Patrick Wymark. He is now managing-director of a civil engineering firm in conflict with his chairman Caswell Bligh, played by Clifford Evans. The script editor, as for the earlier series, will be Wilfred Greatorex, who has found a potent formula for presenting Organization Man, red in tooth and claw, to the television public.

"About 60 to 65 per cent of the action will take place in Whitehall and Westminster," he says, "and the rest in the civil engineering industry. Clearly, these days power resides not only in politics and in the Civil Service, but also in industry. We chose civil engineering because it is a politics-intensive industry. So much public money goes into it.

"Power is a subject which has fascinated me since I was a boy, growing up in a cotton town in Lancashire during the slump. Looking around at the conditions there, you felt strongly that the power to alter them lay somewhere else, that we were being manipulated by the people down in London."

The power behind The Power Game is a square, cheerful, be-spectacled ex-newspaperman of 44, with hair cut en brosse and a name like an adman's inspiration, with subliminal suggestions of power and uplift ("Start the day with Greatorex!").

He started his television career writing intensively researched documentaries, and care for exact detail is a hallmark of his work. "I hate it when I see some glaring inaccuracy in a television play," he says. "I just feel I want to switch off at once."

He began by sketching out the general story line of the first 13 episodes, working in consultation with four advisers: two civil engineers (one an independent consultant, the other a senior executive of a big contracting firm) and two young MPs (Peter Kirk, Tory; and Brian Walden, Labour). The scriptwriters, who work in close collaboration with him, are all respected television playwrights: Edmund Ward, Peter Draper, Raymond Bowers and John Bowen. Greatorex is himself writing three of the first episodes.

He says that an occupational hazard of his job is being accosted by friends who are sure that they recognize the real-life originals of his characters. "Clearly, I've had in mind tycoons I've known," he says, "but these characters really grow out of a mixture of people. If you reproduce too closely from life, you get accused not of being too observant, but of being wildly unreal. People don't believe it.

"At the start of The Plane Makers, John Wilder was detested by top management in the aircraft industry. By the time we'd finished, top management wouldn't miss an episode. One day, towards the end of the series, I had a call from someone I knew in the industry. He said: 'For God's sake, lay off! One of our managing-directors has suddenly decided he's John Wilder. Wednesday mornings are hell'."

We still have that."

He was soon doing well enough to give up sales promotion and start commissioning work himself. One day he came across an American paperback called The Awful Speller's Dictionary, which starts with the wrong spelling and gives the right one afterwards. He cabled the author, signed him, and has sold over one hundred thousand copies.

Mr. Wolfe likes to work fast. "If we can't say yes to a book within five minutes, we don't take it." The philosophy has stood him in good stead. "After the dictionary, it dawned on me that there were thousands of awful things. And thus the Awful Series started. The Awful Gardener's Book, The Awful Mathematician's Book, The Awful Bride's Book, The Awful Cook's Book, and so on. I believe there's always an underbelly to publishing. Most of them go for the obvious, and I do the opposite. For instance I've got Pregnant Fathers coming out soon, and something called Lazometrics. You know all this thing which has gone on about Isometrics? How to develop your wrists by pressing your fingers on the top of a desk? Well my book will tell you what muscles you use when you cut the top off an egg, or take the cork out of a bottle, or sit bending and straightening a paper clip. It's a valid and useless system of exercises. We'll follow it with Sexometrics.

"Then of course, we had Jonathan Routh's Good Loo Guide. That's done fantastically well. Companies ring me up and order a hundred copies to use as Christmas cards. In fact, Routh has just been over in America doing a good loo guide for them. We'll publish that as well."

In all this activity there is no attempt at all to satisfy literary journals or pundits. "I don't send copies to literary agents or to reviewers. I don't want to be on the book pages. The nearest I ever came to any of that was with A Cupful Of Tears. Sixteen Victorian novelties chosen solely for their capacity to make you cry. (I reckoned it was time someone made some money out of crying.) Then Marghanita Laski Continued overleaf

This 14th century Byzantine icon, representing "The Christ Pantocrator," is the centre of an exhibition at the Temple Gallery, 4 Yeomans Row, SW3. The icon, of exceptional quality and condition and rare for the period, is a classical example of a Classic form and style. Its exact origin is a matter for speculation, but it may have come from Mount Athos. Also in the exhibition are 60 icons, including an important group of Russian Novgorod School, and an unusual item - a Venetian icon with Arabic markings.

gave it a review. Almost the only one we've ever had. She was a bit toffee-nosed about it. She said it wasn't representative of Victorian literature. I ask you."

He will publish shortly something called A Millionaire's Diary. "Our first elaborate six-guinea job"—it will give you the telephone number of the airport in Guatemala (for people who want to import strawberries out of season), or tell you the name of the best hairdresser in Aleppo.

"Here, have a look at this. Key Facts. A complete series we'll have. Maths, English, French, History, Biology. Everything anyone needs to pass the O-level examination. And they're all on cards, not bound up like a book. We've designed them as an amalgam of the total fact requirements of the O-level exams during the last ten years. They're a really high class crib. All you do is learn them like a parrot."

Mr. Wolfe's only ambition is to carry on as he has been doing in the last three years. He has no intention of conforming to the standard English traditions of publishing and good taste.

"They're a rotten bunch," he says of most publishers. "They've got no idea of business, don't know how to sell books, and it has never occurred to them that books could be part of people's lives, instead of the part you don't read in the Sunday papers."

"Perhaps I'm a non-publisher; but the day I get a review in the Lit. Sup. is the day I pack up and go home."

BILLY BUNTER LIVES ON

The name Charles Hamilton appears on nobody's short list of great writers of the 20th century, partly because he was an execrable stylist, partly because people tend to be sheepish about confessing a taste for the execrable. But if bulk of output counts for anything, then Hamilton was a titan, writes Benny Green, maintaining an annual output of one and half million words for 50 years. And if vigour of characterization comes into it, then he takes his undisputed place alongside Conan Doyle and Rice Burroughs in the pantheon of modern popular art. Hamilton's reputation stands or falls on a single creation, the archetype of the podgy schoolboy, that corpulent pipsqueak of the Greyfriars Remove, William George Bunter.

Hamilton died four years ago at the age of 85, and the only man likely to dispute these facts would have been Hamilton himself. His attachment to the pen-name of Frank Richards became so ingrained that in his own mind Hamilton was one of the obscure casualties of the Edwardian era. In his 86th year Bunter's creator tape-recorded memories and impressions of an astonishing career, and when the recording engineers asked him whether he preferred to be addressed as Hamilton or Richards, the reply was, "Richards if you please. Charles Hamilton died 50 years ago".

In fact, the Hamilton-Richards syndrome represents one of the most alluring cases of split personality in the whole range of popular art. Even the autobiography, significantly of Richards, not Hamilton, was written in the third person.

Today nobody is sure what kind of early background Hamilton had. Though it seems likely that he was the son of a schoolmaster and at least possible that he was educated at some kind of private school. Floreat Greyfriars! the long-playing album of his reminiscences which appears on 3 December, may therefore seem to have an irresistible appeal as the answer to a thousand questions. In fact, Hamilton remained tight-lipped to the last. Though the album is compulsive listening from start to finish, there are no revelations about the early years. So far as Hamilton was concerned, life apparently began at 14.

Floreat Greyfriars! justifies its existence as a literary oddity because of its information about the genesis of Bunter, Harry Wharton, Hurree Singh, Vernon-Smith and the rest.

The secret of their sustained appeal to men of all ages is probably contained in the fact that to their creator they were real people, as large as life and twice as vital. Denis Preston, the recording executive who taped Hamilton's conversation, discovered this weird fact within moments of stepping inside Hamilton's Ramsgate semi-detached four years ago.

"He began to talk about Vernon-Smith, the Bounder of the Remove. He talked of him in the present tense, and I had the feeling that Hamilton knew Vernon-Smith was in the next room and likely to walk in at any moment. Even the meal we ate that afternoon was not a meal so much as a study blow-out. Muffins, jam tarts, cakes and two sorts of jam. Authentic Greyfriars."

In Floreat Greyfriars! Hamilton reveals himself as a simple old man with dogmatic opinions about other writers, virtual total recall about the early days of The Magnet and The Gem, and a kind of gentle amazement that anybody in the 1960s should bother about him at all.

"Truth imitates Art", says Hamilton, echoing Wilde perhaps without realizing it. "Fiction has to be more appropriate than real life", he goes on, and gives examples of how he heard an Anglo-Indian on a train say once, "Top of a beautiful morning" and suddenly had a mental picture of Hurree Singh complete in his head, how he read an advertisement for a quack medicine called Bunter's Nervine, grafted on to it the paunch of one relative, the spectacles of another, the ever-expected postal order of a third, and found himself with the hottest property in fiction since Sherlock Holmes and Tarzan.

Sometimes, says Hamilton, "I can hardly believe that Bunter doesn't really exist".

The truth is that Bunter does exist, more certainly than Charles Hamilton ever did. The renaissance began in 1947 with a Bunter hardback, blossomed into a TV series and by 1958 had broken into pantomime. By 1961, the last year of Hamilton's life, hardback sales were into the hundreds of thousands. Typically, his parting shot was a Bunter story in The Times Educational Supplement — in Latin. The piece had one blemish. "There was one little difficulty. 'Yarooh' cannot be translated into any language but English".

FOR MONKHOUSE, A £15-A-WEEK INDULGENCE

Bob Monkhouse, most suave of comedians, says he has made enough money to live comfortably for a year without working. "I think I am entitled to indulge myself a little," he adds.

First indulgence is his appearance this week in an 18th century French comedy The Gulls at the Jeanetta Cochrane Theatre, Holborn. He will receive £15 a week.

"I am 37. When I was young and ambitious, writing for newspapers and putting captions to cartoons, I had great ideas. I was going to be a serious painter, a renowned writer, an acclaimed actor. I turned out to be a rather unimpressive actor and I found it far easier to get a laugh.

"I have spent my life pleasing people. You know, it wasn't until I was 30 that I lost my temper. Now it is time that I did something for myself. I believe I have reached a mature level of acting. I am writing the last pages of a novel — but I expect it won't be until I am 80 and living in Barbados that I start painting seriously."

A further indulgence is a £3,500 series he is filming for ABC TV called Mad Movies, drawing from his own £30,000 library of classic comedy films. Buster Keaton, Charlie Chaplin, Harold Lloyd, Laurel & Hardy are included.

Next year he plans a series of silent colour films using the cream of Europe's circus clowns. Monkhouse lives in St John's Wood; his house is reminiscent of pre-war Hollywood movies, wrought iron gates, pillars, marble staircase. Over the fireplace in his lounge is a painting of a sad-faced clown. It is no fun being a rich comic if you can't be self-indulgent.

Floreat Greyfriars! will be issued by Columbia Records on Friday, 3 December at 32s.

At 21, Miss Chaplin steps up

Geraldine Chaplin is 21, the daughter of Charles. She has her first important film part in Doctor Zhivago, playing Tonya, the doctor's wife. These pictures by David Montgomery give a preview of her clothes, designed by Phyllis Dalton and made by Berman's. Doctor Zhivago is scheduled for a New York premiere on 22 December: it will be released in London early next year. Produced by Carlo Ponti and directed by David Lean, it stars Omar Sharif and Julie Christie, supported by Alec Guinness, Tom Courtenay, Ralph Richardson, Rod Steiger, Rita Tushingham and Siobhan McKenna woman's face changes at such a time. It isn't that she becomes plain but her looks are not quite under control. She is already at the disposal of the future that she carries within her, she is no longer only herself."

2 "To Yury, his old friend Tonya, until then a part of his life which had always been taken for granted and had never needed explaining, had suddenly become the most inaccessible and complicated being he could imagine. She had become a woman."

5 "Yury was standing absent-mindedly in the middle of the ballroom, watching Tonya as she danced with a stranger. She swept up to him, flounced her short satin train like a fish, and vanished. She was very excited."

WRITERS ON RESTAURANTS

GODFREY WINN'S PERSONAL CHOICE: THE CAPRICE

A few weeks ago I was having my annual fast at Forest Mere, a health hydro in Hampshire, which I find extremely efficacious for my esprit de corps, and inevitably a discussion started among the devotees, as they supped off a glass of fruit juice or a few grapes, as to what shape and form their first meal would take when, appreciably thinner, they went back into life again.

Some people had the oddest fancies. One woman confessed that she dreamt every night of hot cross buns, oozing butter. Another said how she longed for kippers, which she never usually ordered. The males, more predictably, drooled on about crisp bacon and scrambled eggs, or a grilled tournedos and French fried potatoes.

I remained silent, relishing my own dream. That same vision which haunts me every year during my ten days' abstinence. I see, in my mind's eye, the restaurant with the deep red hangings, the crowned gilt mirrors on the walls, my favourite table in the corner, the waiters laying before me my idea of a perfectly balanced meal, nine oysters, a young grouse, as soufflé citronella to follow; while the little sommelier, Newman, with a great knowledge (who is as much part of the décor as Margaret, the demure, pretty guardian in black, who sits on a small prim chair outside the Ladies' Loo), bends over my table and suggests half a carafe of a Loire wine, a white Sauvignon, for the oysters, and another half of a burgundy from the Beaujolais country, a Marquisat, with the bird.

After all that orange juice, oh the joy!

But most of all I relish the welcome that all his customers, either old friends or newcomers from out of town, receive from the Caprice's patron, Mario Gallati, who took over this white elephant in Arlington House nearly twenty years ago. Backed in the beginning by many theatrical names, like Ivor Novello, Terence Rattigan and Jack Buchanan, he has succeeded in making the Caprice one of the most consistently patronized eating places in London. Yes, even after the expense-account Budget.

Actually, it has never had the expense-account look. You sense that the majority of the customers are paying out of their pocket. You will often find elegant women like Fleur

Cowles there, who despite her increasingly successful career as a painter and writer, still finds time somehow to sustain the one authentic salon in London, for all the arts, and uses the Caprice as her local for lunch.

In the evenings you will see many tables occupied by stars like Laurence Harvey, eating after the show, or family parties, like Lord and Lady Shawcross, with their children having their last fling before going back to school.

And Mario tells of the day when two young men with two attractive young women asked for a discreet table tucked away at the unfashionable end of the long room, and it was only when, the day's rush over, he was able to accept an invitation to have a liqueur with them, that he suddenly realized one of the quartette was Princess Margaret.

Naturally it pleases him that the Snowdens still come often to his restaurant. But what pleases him even more is that in his eyes – and are there any shrewder eyes than those of a first-class restaurateur? – the princess's husband has not altered by one iota in his manner.

"But then, the big people are like that," Mario says. "They are always the easiest to serve. They never complain, even when they have to be kept waiting for a table."

Another of his favourites, though he admits to having none, is that outsize character Mr Nubar Gulbenkian, who has recently set on record that he considers the Caprice has the best service in London.

I echo that, though I also have a soft corner in my stomach both for Claridges and the Savoy Grill, and I am sure the reason why the service is so friendly without ever being subservient, is that everyone takes their tempo and their tone from the maître, now in his seventies, though he looks 15 years younger, who comments cheerfully:

"You go on and on, and hope that some day someone will notice you are alive."

Nothing is too much trouble for him. He has even designed his own table glasses, with sturdy bases but delicate lines, a combination that is, in a way, symbolic of the cuisine, which is surprisingly reasonable by West End standards today.

For instance, the two wines which I enjoyed the other night are priced at 25s, a bottle, and as I sat there, relishing them in turn, I had the pleasure of chatting with the patron and asking him what he considered was the main ingredient, not so much for initial success as for sustaining a really high standard across the years.

He answered promptly. "In a really good restaurant, all the soups are freshly created. Nothing comes out of a tin."

"Do many restaurants use tins of soup today?"

"I am afraid so."

"You can get a most excellent bisque d'homard from Fortnum's," I challenged him, adding truthfully, "We serve it at home and I swear it is undetectable."

"I had to pay twelve-and-six a pound today, in the market, for lobsters, but it was worth it for the soup," he said simply.

Then there was silence, as I thought how it all began.

His father was a shoemaker in Broni, near Milan. The boy Mario started work at eight. By the time he was thirteen, he had travelled as a waiter all over Europe, and it was from Nice that he took the final plunge, and came to England, completely alone, without links or friends. He found himself digs in Charlotte Street, and later was to marry the daughter of the house, a handsome, buxom woman who looks like an opera star in retirement.

The boy Mario's first job in England was for 5s. a week, as general factotum to a family in Bayswater. It was the only way to learn the language, he explains. Later he continued his apprenticeship at the Hotel Cecil, the Savoy, Romano's in its heyday, till eventually he became the very popular manager of the Ivy at the height of its theatrical glories.

By this time, both his children were growing up; both, too, to distinguish themselves in their own way. The son, Frank, achieved the rank of lieutenant in the Intelligence, in the war, and is now a most successful company director on the Continent. The daughter, Mary, has produced many books, including a novel of real substance, The Silver Bow.

The Gallatis are a devoted family and their closeness has set its mark upon the restaurant itself. For the father, in turn, regards every member of the staff as his own family. And his customers, too!

I am certain myself that that is the definitive reason for the Caprice's very special charm.

Ben Carruthers is 29. He has been an actor for 10 years, his face known but almost forgotten since his lead role in Shadows when he was only 20. After his success in that film, he could have gone to Hollywood and become "a canned star." Instead he stayed on in New York until the market fell out of independent feature films, and his friends began to leave. "It's a complete myth that you have to be in New York to 'make it'" he says. So two years ago he came to England. "I had a hunch about England. I came here because I felt it was waiting for me. Now it's my home. I get by pretty well with a name like Carruthers. People sort of accept me."

He has just completed an independent feature called Scruggs. Budgeted at under £50,000, starring himself and Susannah York, it is photographed by Raoul Coutard, directed by 21-year-old David Hart, and will be seen sometime in January. The film tells an improvised story about a "poetic gangster who spends half his time trying to 'defrock' himself, until he meets a girl so fascinated by his guns, coshes, and fast driving, that she forces him back into the play."

Ben Carruthers now hopes to direct his own film, for which he has already written the script. "It's about an American film director called Count Downe, who comes to London to direct a Vampire film. He is a vampire. You carry on from there."

Anatomy of a musical

Currently Lionel Bart's Twang!! is going through a period of rewriting and walking out. But it's not the first show to suffer from a clash of temperaments and talents. A year ago, in America, a musical called Kelly ran into even more spectacular trouble before opening and closing on the same night. LEWIS LAPHAM reports on every stage of this classic backstage drama

Photographs by Henry Grossman/Curtis

Ella Logan, a star of Kelly, was fired before it opened. It was to have been her triumphant return to the stage . . .

ACT I

The first rehearsals took place in an old theatre on the seventh floor of the New Amsterdam movie house at Broadway and 42nd Street. Herbert Ross, the director and choreographer, sat in a wooden chair placed on an old burlesque runway. Although he was well-established as a choreographer of television shows and Broadway musicals, Kelly was the first musical that he had ever directed.

During those first weeks, gradually giving substance to his visions of space and movement, he seldom raised his voice, preferring to speak to the company with light sarcasm. His horn-rimmed glasses and the deep lines in his gentle face gave him the appearance of a university professor.

"You're doing this like a bunch of drunken old ladies, for heaven's sake," he would say to the dancers or, "Don't just sit there like an Equity member, Leslie, react."

Moose Charlap and Eddie Lawrence attended every rehearsal, both of them pacing nervously up and down the aisles, watching their play from different angles. They had written Kelly five years before, in nine days and nine nights of fierce inspiration. They had been unable to get it performed, however, because the producers to whom they brought it had wanted to make unacceptable changes in the script.

Conceived as an ironic farce, the play concerned a young Irish immigrant (Hop Kelly) who, before the opening curtain, has tried and failed in three attempts to jump from the Brooklyn Bridge. The action takes place along the Bowery during the late 1880's.

A sarcastic and cocksure youth, Kelly had offered to jump from the bridge in a moment of braggadocio. A group of gamblers took him up on the offer and squandered large amounts of money on his three losses of nerve.

As the play opens the gamblers are ready to bet on him once again, but this time, to insure their investment, they intend to make him party to a fraud, by means of a complicated scheme to throw a dummy off the bridge. In his first appearance on stage, however, Kelly sings a soliloquy in which he reveals hope of regaining self-respect by honestly risking death. The dramatic action depends on the ensuing conflict between Kelly and the gamblers.

At various intervals the characters pause, in the tradition of Berthold Brecht, to sing songs intended as commentaries to the audience. These dealt with such themes as social injustice and the falsity of romantic love.

Both Lawrence and Charlap thought of the play as an artistic statement about modern life, not as a Broadway entertainment. They were thankful that in Susskind and Melnick they at last had found producers with the courage to present such a play.

"Those other guys," Lawrence said, referring to other producers, "wanted to change the kid into some kind of knight in shining armour, like a crummy lovestory."

A man in his early 40's, Lawrence had a cold and self-contained manner, as if he never quite heard what anybody said to him. Although known principally as a nightclub comic and as an author of comedy sketches for television, Lawrence had also studied painting for four years after the war with Ferdinand Léger in Paris, and he believed that an artist's work was inviolable. Kelly was his first full-length play.

Charlap, more excitable and intense, had composed the music for three Broadway shows, among them Peter Pan. A small man, almost bald, he walked with a bouncing gait and spoke in a quick and husky voice, generally accompanied by violent chopping motions of both hands.

On the afternoon of the third day, Daniel Melnick came confidently forward out of the gloom of the darkened theatre, his overcoat draped across his shoulders. On his way across the stage he paused to kiss two chorus girls lightly on their foreheads. Under the overcoat, the collar of which was trimmed in fur, he wore a double-breasted cashmere sweater with suede buttons.

"Ask any question you can think of," he said, introducing himself. "With any luck you will be able to write a textbook on how to produce a play in the American musical theatre."

Although Levine had contributed the major amount of money, he had entrusted the production to Susskind and Melnick. Levine had been brought into the venture by David Susskind and Daniel Melnick, Susskind's partner in his television enterprises, and between them they had raised $450,000 for the play's production, a sum they then thought adequate to the purpose. Of that original money Levine put up $250,000; Susskind and Melnick persuaded a small group of investors to put up another $150,000; and Columbia Records, in return for rights to the record album, had advanced $50,000. None of the producing partners had ever before attempted a Broadway musical.

At the age of 32, Melnick had been Susskind's partner for the past year in Talent Associates Paramount Ltd, a company that packages and sells television shows. Of Lawrence and Charlap, he said: "Eddie and Moose, of course, are insane."

He intended the remark as a high compliment, meaning to suggest that the richness of their talent surpassed the understanding of ordinary people.

Susskind appeared later that evening. He wore an old raincoat and walked with the rolling gait of a sailor or a prizefighter. "We're not remote, entrepreneurial figures," he said, "we're gutty, rich, virile, accessible." Laughingly he remembered the numerous auditions for prospective investors, many of whom had been confused by the unconventional aspects of the play. "Overbred society people," he said, "... the critics had not yet told them what to think."

The Cort Theatre, a week later

At the end of the rehearsal on Thursday night, Ross, Melnick, Susskind, Lawrence and Charlap gathered in the 11th row to consider the possible elimination of two songs.

"Let's be realistic, gentlemen," Melnick said, "it's not coming off, and we cannot hold on to the dream."

As soon as Charlap understood the intent of the conversation, he began to twitch nervously. Susskind put his arm around him, seeking to comfort him.

"Moose, Moose," he said, "stop that nonsense. Nobody's going to hurt you."

"I won't cut it," Charlap said,

"I'm sorry; I simply won't do it."

So saying, he got up and walked out of the theatre.

The rehearsals proceeded without incident for the rest of the week, and on Sunday the cast presented a run-through of the entire play for an audience of about 100 friends and relatives. The friends and relatives did not laugh much, nor did they applaud in a way that could be thought heartening.

The audience's lack of enthusiasm had a depressing effect on Ross, who sat slumped in his seat in the last row, his face in his hands.

"There isn't a page of dialogue that works," he said, "not a line."

Melnick, however, managed to interpret any apparent failure as an inconsequential illusion. Of the audience's response on this occasion, he said:

"They're interested. They're intrigued, but they're too respectful, like it was a poetry reading or an evening at the Ninety-Second Street Y.M.H.A. The love scene is too honest."

Much later that night, after long and involved conversations in the men's room, everybody agreed that except for a few minor troubles in the first act, the play was in remarkably good shape. Ross, having regained his composure, expected slight changes in Philadelphia. "Maybe we could cut twenty minutes," he said, "nothing's so good that it can't be cut."

"The wonderful thing about this show," Melnick said, "is that everybody is working together. There is none of that terribleness, that viciousness, those cliques common to most musicals. What we have here is a unity."

En route to Philadelphia, 22 December 1964: late morning

The talk in the car, a long Cadillac with two telephones, devolved largely on deals; for books, movies, plays, people, television rights and common stocks. Joseph E. Levine, his hat placed firmly on his head, his hands spread motionless on his knees, sat on the back seat with Susskind. Melnick sat in front with the driver. They talked with the largesse of Monopoly players exchanging railroads and utilities.

Levine was in a contented mood. His most recent film had opened the day before in New York to rave notices and was expected to gross several million dollars at box offices across the country. For a man who had started out in Boston 59 years ago with no money and no prospects, and who had, among other things, sold plastic statuettes of Daddy Grace on the streets of Harlem, Levine had come a long way.

As the car moved slowly through the Lincoln Tunnel, Melnick explained that they might have trouble selling tickets to Kelly because Don Francks, in the lead, was an unknown name.

"He's not a star, Joe" Melnick said, "in Kansas they never heard of him . . . Jesus, what am I talking about, Kansas . . . they don't know him on Forty-Second Street,"

"So I'll give him three pictures," Levine said.

Susskind reminded Levine that he was to appear the following week on Susskind's television show, Hot Line, together with Isaac Stern, the violinist, and Risë Stevens, the opera singer.

"It's a classy guest list, Joe," Susskind said, "you could talk about Kelly."

During the rest of the trip Susskind seldom spoke. Levine and Melnick, however, continued to talk about money. Levine said he had just bought the movie and television rights to Romain Gary's new novel, The Ski Bum.

"Did you read the book, Joe?" Melnick asked.

"What do you mean, did I read it? I didn't have to read it. I bought it."

As the car approached Philadelphia, edging through the suburbs on the north side of town, Levine asked a series of questions about Kelly. Being a novice at producing for the stage, he wanted to know about costs, renting theatres, unions, advertising programs, and other theatrical figures.

cedures. At the end of this conversation, by way of a joke, he asked, "So when do we close?"

Everybody laughed at that, and Levine said that no matter what happened on Broadway, he would make the play into "a helluva movie."

ACT II

Philadelphia, the Shubert theatre, the following night

The run-through required the better part of two days. The revelation of the sets and costumes inspired Susskind and Melnick to elaborate compliments. "Smashing, Freddy, absolutely gorgeous," Melnick would say to Wittop. "Ravishing, Oliver, perfectly ravishing," Susskind would say to Smith. The sets had cost almost $100,000.

Because several scenes took place on the Bowery, in a lower-class milieu, many of the costumes, which cost another $90,000, had been made to look poor. "They look so good," Melnick said, "as if they came from an Army-Navy surplus store for $3.98."

"My rags are silk chiffon," Wittop said, "otherwise they wouldn't float that way. The idea is poetic dirt, not just a dirty look."

Charlap and Lawrence, however, disapproved of both sets and costumes. They would have preferred a bleak stage and abstract sets, something more in the tradition of Berthold Brecht.

"This is too real, too materialistic, too rich," Charlap said. "The imagination droops, and suddenly you're competing with My Fair Lady. In East Germany they would understand how to do this play."

"Well, if it's a stiff," Lawrence said, "we can always charge admission to let the people see the sets and costumes."

Ross, although pleased with the visual effects, worried about the music. He wasn't happy with Sandy Matlovsky, the conductor, and he thought some of the orchestral arrangements lacked style. Matlovsky had been hired at the insistence of Charlap, partly because the two men were friends and partly because Matlovsky had conducted the first New York performance of Brecht's classic Threepenny Opera.

Upon first hearing the orchestra play a dance number called Tough Neighbourhood, Ross said, in an aside to Susskind and Melnick, "That's the worst thing I ever heard . . . it's as if they never saw the parts and telephoned it in!"

In a louder voice, to Matlovsky, he said, "Stop it, Sandy, stop it, I'm sorry, but I want it my way, now . . . it's just terrible."

The rehearsal ended. Ross and the two producers then summoned their authors to a meeting in the basement of the theatre. They had begun to suspect that the character of Hop Kelly was not sufficiently sympathetic or heroic. Earlier that day they had decided to ask Lawrence for three new scenes and Charlap for at least one new song.

Although the authors agreed to these requests, they did so with heavy reluctance, doubts obviously beginning to cloud their minds. When they had left, Melnick said, "You've got to be a Jesuit or a rabbi to justify all the changes and satisfy the emotional needs of these people . . . Authors are like children."

Susskind thought Lawrence and Charlap ungrateful for his and Melnick's advice.

"They ought to be down on their hands and knees for all the creative collaboration they're getting," he said.

The same, three nights later

Levine, who had gone back to New York after a press conference that first day, returned to Philadelphia for the first preview. He watched the performance from the back of the theatre, leaning against the rail behind the last row of seats, together with Susskind, Ross and Melnick. They watched the audience with the fascination of children looking at lions and tigers in a zoo.

Charlap and Lawrence stood off to one side. Of all the people in the theatre they were the ones who most enjoyed the show. Lawrence, who had bought a new tie for the occasion, carried his script under his arm. He laughed at all the jokes and listened complacently to the songs.

Charlap, more nervous, paced excitedly back and forth.

"They (the producers) complained that the book doesn't hold," he said. "Well, it holds, it holds like nothing you ever saw before."

The audience, however, reserved its warmest applause for the sets and costumes. If the customers had arrived discussing Christmas or the weather, they left talking about the same subjects, except for a sympathetic lady in a veil

David Susskind, co-producer of Kelly, pays a benevolent visit to the chorus girls backstage who, expressing the majority opinion, said to a friend on her way through the lobby:

"I feel sorry for the cast."

Ross, Susskind and Melnick walked back to the Barclay Hotel in the rain, all of them trying to think of something reassuring to say.

"I know it's there somewhere," Susskind said.

"I hope we don't get good notices," Ross said. "Eddie will be more difficult if we do . . . it's a question of major rewriting."

"At least we now know the things we thought were bad are really just as bad as we thought," Melnick said.

An hour later, at the Variety Club, a bar frequented by travelling actors, the members of the cast comforted themselves with Scotch and variations of the maxim that Philadelphia audiences are always wrong. They ignored the Christmas tree and the messages of good cheer pasted on the walls.

"In Philly," somebody said, "they hated West Side Story."

"If they liked it," said somebody else, "then we'd really be in trouble."

The Barclay Hotel, the morning of 29 December

In a room overlooking Rittenhouse Square, Ross, Melnick and Susskind sat staring gloomily at the Philadelphia newspapers scattered on the floor.

The play had opened the night before, and the reviews were mixed. The Philadelphia Daily News, the least important of the local papers, thought Kelly "a thing of quality . . . rowdy in humour and blessed with memorable music and engaging dance." But the critic for the Philadelphia Bulletin spoke of "a tedious story torpedoed by indecision and the easiness with which it is led up blind alleys." He described Hop Kelly as "a one-dimensional oaf." The producers chose to believe the worst of the reviews.

"This show is an accumulation of non sequiturs," Susskind said, "for a hero we have an oaf, a passive iconoclast, a whiner, a cardboard social protest. There is self-pity implicit in his every speech and move."

"We have to get a line to the story," Ross said, "and then try to fill in the motivations. It happens all the time, just a matter of making the kid heroic."

After an hour of anguished conversation, they decided to move a successful dance number from the second to the first act and to insist that Lawrence write whatever they told him to write. They also wanted to cut the opening soliloquy, a song for Francks called Ode to the Bridge.

Charlap and Lawrence, accompanied by Matlovsky, the conductor, arrived about noon.

Susskind began by reading aloud the sentence of the review about "a tedious story torpedoed by indecision." He then said, "Eddie, I agree with that review 100 per cent."

Lawrence merely stared at him, saying nothing, his mouth drawing into a stubborn line.

Daniel Melnick, co-producer, was always referred to by Ella Logan as "the smiling killer"

Charlap and Matlovsky looked at the paintings on the walls.

To interrupt the awkward silence, Melnick brought up the subject of the ode to the bridge.

"It's no good, Eddie," he said, "it's Götterdämmerung."

"Of course, like a bad poem," Lawrence said, "that's the whole point of the joke."

"Eddie," Susskind said, "it's a humourless rumination."

"I think it's funny," Lawrence said, "and my friends all think it's funny."

"Your friends are wrong, Eddie," Susskind said.

"I'm not willing to give it up," Lawrence said, "at least not for now."

At that, discouraged by the inflexible expression in Lawrence's face, the producers dropped the subject. They proceeded to the faults in Hop Kelly's character.

"You've got to make the kid more lovable, Eddie," Ross said, "We've got to understand why the girl loves him."

"Have you got that, Eddie?" Susskind said. "Get to the love."

Lawrence then read the three new scenes that he had written over the past two days. The others listened in noncommittal silence. When nobody said anything, Lawrence said, "I don't know what I'm writing any more."

"Eddie," Susskind said, "don't talk like that. You've got a hero, you've got a mission, you've got enemy forces."

"Next time," Lawrence said, "we try out in Hudson's Bay. They haven't seen an actor there in thirty years."

Having thus disposed, at least temporarily, of the writing problems, the producers turned their attention to the music. To Matlovsky, Melnick said, "Sandy, let me level with you. I'm not comfortable, I'm worried, I don't think we're on top of the music."

"It's not the kind of music that plays itself," Matlovsky said, "the score is like a dead animal."

"We've got to have the result, Sandy," Melnick said.

From Charlap the producers also wanted a second new song, this one a ballad for the newly lovable Hop Kelly.

"It should be a song of self-revelation, discovery, recognition," Susskind said, "the I've Grown Accustomed to Her Face of our show."

Although Susskind and Melnick wanted to put all these changes into effect as soon as possible, Ross refused to let them give the new material to the actors until later in the week.

"Don't mess around with these people, Danny," he said to Melnick, "they're tired. I'm not going to see the show for the rest of this week, and I don't care what happens on stage. This is only Philadelphia. Who cares what happens in Philadelphia?"

As the meeting adjourned, just after two o'clock, Lawrence permitted himself a last wistful remark: "I liked my own show better. It was intimate and small, and now I see it turning into a lavish Broadway spectacle."

"Eddie, there's a big hit here," Susskind said. "This is the show you intend to write."

"I hate it," Lawrence said.

The Barclay Hotel, the morning of 5 January

The new material had proved as disappointing as the old. The audience on Monday night laughed weakly at the new jokes and failed to demonstrate any additional sympathy for the new Hop Kelly. Susskind, informed of this disappointment on the telephone to London, demanded improvements; Levine called later in the day from New York giving similar instructions.

Sitting in the same chairs as on the previous Tuesday, Ross, Melnick, Charlap and Lawrence shared a common anxiety. They felt a need for strong and decisive action. Ross, who looked cold and tired, sat with his hands concealed in the sleeves of his sweater.

"I have something very dramatic," he said, ". . . it's Ella."

Nobody said anything. Ella Logan had last appeared on Broadway in 1947 as the lead in Finian's Rainbow, and her role as mother of Hop Kelly was to have served as the vehicle for her triumphant return to the stage.

"She's so vulgar I can't stand it. She's hurting us, and she will definitely have to go."

"She's a cancer," Melnick said, "a Trotskyite."

Both Charlap and Lawrence, surprised by this suggestion, pointed out that Miss Logan was the nearest person they had to a star, that so far she had received the loudest applause, that many tickets had been sold because of her name, and that, without her, the already small business at the box office might diminish even further.

"That's a chance we must take," Melnick said. "If she were fabulous, we might not have the guts to get rid of her, but her part is irrelevant. We can give her lines to the father."

"You get a lot of laughs with

At around midnight Don Francks passed silently and wonderingly through the room, a riding crop under his arm and his familiar black notebook clutched in his left hand.

As the character of Hop Kelly gradually became sentimental, Francks's performance became less convincing. This confused and alarmed him, and so, on this particular night, leaving the Variety Club without saying more than a few words to anybody, he went back to his hotel room and wrote of his disillusion in his usual cryptic style. (The relevant entry in his notebook later read: "Thank you for your plastic flowers; thank you for your rubber fern . . . the bubbles in my pink champagne have burst.")

On his way out of the bar Francks smiled bleakly at Charlap, who, with his wife, sat drinking in the corner of the room under the Christmas tree. Charlap was brooding about the transformation of the play and the arguments won and lost with producers.

"The job of the creative man," he said, "is not to let the money men vitiate his work."

And then, growing more excited with the liquor and the late hour and the enormity of the injustice he felt inflicted upon him, he quoted at random from the work of Ezra Pound, savagely cutting the air with his hands and mixing up the verses of several poems.

"O helpless few in my country," he began, "O remnant enslaved, thwarted against the systems . . . Go my songs . . . I have weathered out this storm; I have beaten out my existence."

Ella Logan came in at about 2 a.m. Round-faced and sly, a woman in her early 50's, she wore a Hawaiian blouse and looked around the room with the exaggerated melodrama of a conspirator in a Shakespearean play.

Talking softly among her supporters in the corner of the bar opposite to Charlap, she reported Melnick's visit to her dressing room. That night, she said, he had come to her and told her that her part was being reduced to five lines in the first act and six lines in the second. She interpreted this manoeuvre as an attempt to humiliate her and thus oblige her, for reasons of her own pride, to quit the show. If she quit, the producers could say that she had violated the contract and therefore they were under no obligation to pay her.

"But I ain't moving," she said. "I told him very politely I'd the mother," Lawrence said.

"Two laughs, Eddie," Melnick said.

"Nobody understands my jokes," Lawrence said.

Without further argument it was agreed to do away with Miss Logan: Melnick said he would tell her on Wednesday night after the performance. Then, taking advantage of this new surge of self-confidence, he telephoned Nat Dorfman, the press agent.

"Nat, Nat sweetheart, I'm very disappointed in you . . . I'm unhappy, Nat. The word of mouth is not good enough. Not enough people know that we have a very exciting show. Nat, I'm not interested in sympathy. Nat, I want it on the radio."

The Variety Club, Wednesday night

The miasma of collective depression settled, like a mist in a swamp, along the bar. The members of the company exchanged rumours, saying that a screenwriter from Hollywood (some said it was the man who wrote The Carpetbaggers) would come east to rewrite the script. Others said that after Boston the show would travel to Toronto in hope of gaining additional time in which to make improvements.

Anita Gillette, a small, brown-haired girl with large, soft eyes, sat at a table among several dancers. To Tony di Vecchi, a dancer who kept his money in his shoes, she said, "Tony, am I on the way up or the way down?"

"If it's a big hit, honey," he said, "you're on the way up."

speak to my lawyer, and I ain't moving."

Philadelphia, the Lu Lu Temple, Thursday afternoon

Ross had called the actors together for a line rehearsal in the grand ballroom of the Masonic Temple down the street from the theatre. Halfway through the third scene in Act 1, Jesse White, an actor in the role of the principal gambler attempting to corrupt Kelly, slammed his script on the floor and addressed Eddie Lawrence.

"How can I say a line like that, Eddie, for God's sake. What does it mean?" he said. "It stinks. It's not funny. If we go to Boston with this stuff, the critics will kill us. We keep hearing that you're going to write new material, but all you do is bring the same old stuff, warmed over. I'm out on the stage and nothing happens."

"If you don't like it," Lawrence said, "you can quit."

He then stood up and walked stiffly from the room, his script under his arm, his mouth set in the familiar obstinate line. He was followed by Eileen Rodgers, again in tears.

"I can't stand the screaming," she said.

Waiting for the rehearsal to resume, Ella Logan, now frankly outspoken about the faults of the production, whispered to a dancer that Ross had lost control of his actors.

"Too many ears," she said, "Herbie has too many ears . . . There's something frightfully fishy going on; you can't trust anybody around here. With most plays you never see the producers but these guys do everything but come in rehearsal clothes." From that moment on she was always to refer to Melnick as "the smiling killer."

When the company again assembled for the reading, Ross and Melnick both made short speeches, seeking to reassure the actors. "I know the script is bad," Ross said, "but changes will be made. You must not deteriorate under the emotional strain. It's rough, but that's why we are out on the road."

"At this critical moment," Melnick said, "we must not lose faith in Herb. We cannot behave like animals, snapping and snarling to protect individual interests. All of us have to recognize one thing. Eddie may be a son of a bitch, but he's our son of a bitch."

He went on to tell Miss Logan that she was a destructive influence, and he asked her to please cooperate.

"If the show's a flop," he said, "we'll all go back to television."

"You'll go back," Miss Logan said. "Some of us belong in the theatre."

The Shubert Theatre, the next day

Lawrence came to the theatre shortly before noon, expecting to watch the actors rehearse a scene that he had written the previous night. Despite his objection to the producers' intentions he had heads," Ross was saying. "Don't worry about what it means; just respond to whatever is said to you."

Lawrence listened incredulously to the ensuing dialogue. After he had heard a minor actor say, "I don't know how the kid is going to jump off that monster and live," he walked out.

A few minutes later, however, he could be heard shouting at Melnick in the lobby.

"This is a disgrace," he said. "These lines will never reach the stage, never. This is sentimental slop. This is abominable."

again, he said, would he produce a musical comedy under the conditions now imposed on him. He particularly resented the contract he had signed with Lawrence and Charlap; under its clear, Dramatists' Guild terms not a word of the script could be changed without their consent.

Although conceding that Lawrence had seemed a little upset just a few minutes before, he nevertheless thought that both authors would listen to reason at the meeting scheduled for that evening in his hotel room. What with all the money involved, and the chance for a hit, he could not imagine that reasonable men would argue about a few lines of dialogue.

"For five hours I'll listen to the charade," he said. "I'll let them catharsize."

"They'll go along. We'll all be happy together in Boston."

agreed to more revision.

Before he arrived however, Ross, acceding to the actors' requests and to his own intuition, had discarded the scene. Instead of following the script, he was conducting an experiment in improvisation, asking the actors to invent their own lines.

As Lawrence entered from backstage, a small, precise and well-dressed figure, he saw Ross sitting among four or five actors on folding chairs, all of them staring expectantly into the rafters.

"I would like you people to say anything that comes into your

Although his exact words were not distinguishable, Melnick's voice, much softer, could be heard mumbling appeasement. When he returned to his seat (Lawrence had again withdrawn to his hotel), Melnick was handed a telegram from an associate in his New York office.

NOTES FROM THE IVORY TOWER. WORD IN NEW YORK IS KELLY BIG HIT. TEASERS UP. LOOK GREAT. HAVE SEEN ADVANCE SUNDAY AD. SENSATIONAL.

The telegram partially restored Melnick's self-confidence. Never Lawrence and Charlap never went to Boston with the company. On Friday, 8 January, the same night that Melnick predicted reconciliation, he received a second telegram, this one from the authors' lawyers, threatening "appropriate action" if he and Susskind continued to permit unauthorized changes in the script.

Susskind returned from London on Monday, 11 January, and rescinded the decision to abandon Miss Logan. Lawrence accordingly proceeded to write her part back into the play.

Lawrence's third and last revision went into the play on the evening of Tuesday, 12 January. Although satisfactory to the authors, it failed to encourage the producers. Later that night they confronted their authors in the Barclay Hotel and presented an ultimatum. Melnick reported the substance of the conversation at breakfast.

"We told Eddie he was written out, that he was dry and had reached a dead end. The hero is still a petulant, mean and whining kid. We told Eddie he needs help, another writer."

Lawrence refused the offer, still maintaining that the character of Hop Kelly should be hostile, an anti-hero that the audience comes to admire despite his unattractive manners.

On Friday, Melnick reported that he and Susskind were determined to do whatever they wanted to do with the show, even if it meant getting rid of Lawrence and risking trouble with his lawyers. The play had continued to suffer at the box office, and they had been obliged to raise another $100,000 to pay the show's expenses, first to Boston and thence to New York.

MAURICE BINDER

American with a title

HE'S a self-effacing man. His voice is so soft that his frequent wisecracks cause the listener to do a double take. It takes a while to determine that he's done the titles for at least 30 films and more television ones. "Did you see the Espionage series? I did those. No, I can't remember all the TV shows I've done".

His voice is quiet but his movements are not. He constantly dashes about the flat, moving from one room to the next. He points to a painting and discusses the artist. Talks about a piece of furniture and its designer. He pours drinks, lights cigarettes, keeps moving, Maurice Binder is camera-shy.

Maurice Binder is used to being behind a camera and finds it difficult to suddenly be in front of one. So, he quite unconsciously begins to art direct photographs of himself. He catches himself doing it, apologises and promptly makes another suggestion. Binder laughs a little and shrugs "That's what comes from being in the advertising business for so long!"

For a man who started off wanting to be a naval architect, for a boy who wanted to design ships, it does seem odd that he spends his time designing titles for films like Dr. No and Thunderball and Arabesque.

He was one of the original sound effects men in American radio and from there moved to Macy's Department Store where he handled photography and wound up as their youngest executive. He was then eighteen years old.

The war interrupted things and afterwards he ended up in California working for Columbia Pictures. He designed advertising posters for films like Rita Hayworth's Gilda, then drifted in to doing titles for the films as well. "They're related, you know!" He became Art Director.

Suddenly, Maurice Binder was a travelling man, spending more time in Europe than anywhere and rushing back and forth between Paris and London. "When you've got an apartment in New York that you never see, clothes in Paris and Rome that you never get to wear and paintings in California you can't look at, you have to reach a decision." He has settled on London. "As permanently as a movie man can" he laughs.

He says "Britain is the most exciting place to be. Things are happening here, life is changing. But" a pause "you can still control your life. Sure, the pace is faster than it used to be, but you can make your own pace". He sighs "In New York you get the feeling that if you slow down, the whole city will crumble around you". So he chooses Britain. Because it's more civilised. Because people make their own decisions.

Binder says Britain is an individual's country. And it shows up in everything. People make their own choice. About what they read, wear, see, listen to. Even about what they eat. And drink. People drink vodka now. Cossack Vodka. Because it's a good clean drink. Cossack Vodka because it has enough individuality to mix well with everything. Cossack Vodka because it's new enough to be chosen. Because it's not a traditional drink. Cossack Vodka because it belongs to today.

This quiet American knows what he's stalking about. He says there's room for individuality here. Maurice Binder proves that. So does Cossack Vodka.

"It's incredible," Melnick said, "that guys like Levine and David and myself can be frustrated . . . wrecked . . . by these small-time maniacs . . . I mean, it's unheard of, fantastic . . . The time for pleasantries is past."

On 16 January, Lawrence and Charlap left Philadelphia. The next morning Charlap telephoned from New York and said that he and Lawrence were through with Kelly.

"It's not our show anymore," he said, "it's tenth-rate television jazz."

He reported that on Friday his lawyers had filed a demand for arbitration of the dispute. Levine has come to a meeting that night and there had been an unpleasant scene.

"The whole thing was like a sordid German movie," he said. "Levine shouted a lot. He wanted to know who the hell did we think we were, for Chrissake, Shakespeare and Beethoven? So I made a speech, sforzando, triple f's, and told them all they really cared about was money, and they didn't care what they put on stage as long as some sucker paid $9.90 to see it . . . These men are not human beings to me any more, they're beasts. These are the men who will blow up the world."

On Monday, 18 January, while stage-hands were hanging the scenery in the Shubert Theatre in Boston, Lawrence and Charlap asked their lawyers to seek a court order that would prohibit the producers from bringing the show to New York.

ACT III

Boston, the Shubert Theatre, Wednesday, 20 January

The tedious, familiar business of a dress rehearsal with stage-hands, lighting crew and orchestra began at one p.m. The play was to open that night for what was scheduled as a three-week engagement.

The cast already had learned a new opening scene written by David Goodman, a comedy writer and a friend of Melnick's, who had secretly been with the show for almost a week. The new scene introduced Hop Kelly as a frankly sentimental Irish kid trying to make a success of himself. Whereas in Lawrence's play the boy had been booed and jeered at by a crowd of townspersons when he first came on stage, he was now welcomed with friendly cheers. His father proudly announced him to the people milling around on the Bowery as an idealistic young man. The father's line read: "Clear the road for Hop Kelly, clear the way for the hero of the world."

Melnick, sitting in the middle of the theatre with Ross and Susskind, explained that the tangled affairs of the production had assumed "nightmare proportions."

In order to forestall the authors' demand for arbitration he and Susskind had sought and won a temporary stay in Supreme Court in New York. This stay would postpone the court hearing until the following week. Throughout the rehearsal he was called away to the telephone, presumably to talk to lawyers, and he begrimed the time thus wasted. "The worst of all this," he said, "is that it prevents me from doing the creative work on the show."

Both he and Ross thought that the new scene, together with some other dialogue supplied by Goodman, immensely improved the character of Kelly.

"Until I heard these new lines," Ross said, "I never realized how dreadful Lawrence's stuff was."

The Shubert Theatre, later the same evening

Levine arrived only a few minutes before the opening curtain, accompanied by a retinue of his vice-presidents calling dispatch cases. Throughout most of the performance he remained in the lobby, seated heavily in a red-plush chair, receiving bulletins from Susskind and Melnick. He had come from Hollywood that afternoon, and he looked tired.

Every now and then Susskind or Melnick came out of the theatre to inform Levine of the developments within. Toward the middle of the first act, Melnick appeared and said, "They love it, Joe. It's great, it works."

Two scenes later, Susskind said, "If only we had thrown those nuts out three weeks ago; now the script illuminates the characters instead of obscuring them."

Levine remained of the opinion, however, that the play should be funnier. "More jokes," he kept saying, "there ought to be more jokes."

When it was over, and before they went back to their hotel to talk to the prospective investors, Levine stood in the lobby with his arm across Melnick's shoulders.

"Mister Melnick and Mister Susskind have done a lot of fine work, and they have a lot at stake," he said, carefully avoiding the word "we", "and Mister Melnick, I'll tell you something, you put this show in shape in three weeks and get some laughs, and you'll be the new boy wonder."

Melnick smiled at that and said that if the play was the success he thought it was, he would gladly give some of the profits to charity. Enchanted once again by his own euphoria, he left the theatre in an elated mood, explaining that he had to go back to his hotel to "juggle the balls in the air" among the investors from New York.

Boston, the Ritz Hotel, the afternoon of 21 January

The reviews were as bad or worse than those in Philadelphia.

Again, as in Philadelphia, the producers had chosen to believe the worst. In the room overlooking the Boston Public Gardens, the trees already blurred in the gathering dusk, they sat around in the familiar attitudes of defeat and disillusion, Ross on the sofa, Melnick and Susskind in armchairs. On a tray against the wall were the glasses and the liquor bottles left over from the preceding night.

"I'll give you the bottom line first," Melnick said. "We close here Saturday and open in New York a week from tomorrow night."

He explained that the reviews in the Record American and the Globe foretold financial disaster in Boston. The investors from New York, after staying up to read the papers, and having learned of the impending lawsuit, had refused all offers of a deal. Levine also declined to advance additional money, and at 10 o'clock that morning he had departed for a week's vacation in Jamaica. To Susskind he had said, "David, this is Chicago, and I get off at Chicago."

Levine's defection left Susskind and Melnick in an embarrassing situation. Lacking sufficient money to support the play for its three-week run, they first decided to fold the show and accept their loss. But then, after a long and complicated discussion, they reversed this decision on the ground that if they failed in Boston the gossips back in New York would say that Kelly had been the worst disaster since the Chicago Fire. Whereas if they could at least survive for a few weeks in New York, everybody would forget about it and dismiss it, in Susskind's phrase, as "just another rotten show."

Having reached this conclusion, Susskind had been on the telephone all afternoon in search of $50,000, enough to pay their costs for another week. To raise this money, Susskind had determined upon a plan to promise, for the same investment, equal shares in several of his other productions.

"These money worries sap the creative juices," Susskind said. "I mean, you're always asking yourself if you can get out of town alive. What kind of life is that?"

"If we believed in God," Melnick said, "we'd pray a lot."

The telephone continued to ring throughout the rest of the evening. First it was Don Francks. Melnick spoke to him in his most ingratiating voice. "You were beautiful, sweetheart," he said, "touching, great, terrific, very moving . . . Goddard Lieberson (the president of Columbia Records) saw the show last night, and he says you are the best talent he has seen in the last ten years."

After he hung up, Melnick said, "I thought I'd better come on strong before he had a chance to complain about anything. If he leaves, we're dead."

Balanced on a desk was a design for the cover of the record album that would be issued if the show was to have even a modest success in New York. Susskind looked at it accusingly.

"Someday that could be a collector's item," he said, "the only one of its kind in the world."

The longer he considered this possibility the more depressed he became.

"We haven't got a Chinaman's chance," he said. "I don't believe in miracles or fantasy or magic. There is only truth, and the truth is that this is a bad show. If I thought I could fool Kerr and Taubman and the other critics so easily, I would lose all respect for the American theatre."

Melnick, still possessed by his vision of fortune and success, wanted to rewrite the entire show in a week. Two television comedy writers were on their way from California, and he thought the miracle might yet occur. Lying on the floor, his hands behind his head, staring up at the ceiling, he said, "This is wild, this is radical, but what about a new number for the opening of Act Two? Let's fantasize for a second."

Ross, looking at his shoes, said "There's no content, Danny, nothing. Just a lot of sweat and movement to conceal a lack of content."

"I keep asking myself," Melnick said, "how could those two schlemiels conquer us? It must have been colossal ego on our parts to think that we could work with these people."

At this point the telephone rang again, and it was Charlap. He and Lawrence had come to Boston that afternoon, and they wanted to see the performance that night. Susskind told him he could go to the theatre, but he must not speak to anybody in the company, and he could not speak to Susskind or Melnick.

"All communications must be in writing, Moose," Susskind said on the phone. "I don't want to talk to you . . . nothing verbal, Moose." Hanging up, he said. "The profundity of this experience, this trauma, this holocaust . . . the reason that the world will go up in a puff of smoke is because people don't love each other, they enjoy each other's misery. Moose and Eddie no doubt have their arrogance intact. All that stuff about Brecht, for God's sake. If they wrote My Fair Lady, Eliza Doolittle would have a cleft palate and a limp."

Shubert Theatre, 20 minutes later

Half an hour before the opening curtain the cast assembled backstage to hear their fate. Their faces already made up for the performance, the girls wearing partial costumes or old dressing gowns, they gathered around Susskind, Ross and Melnick.

"Well, I guess I'm elected because I'm on a panel show and should be used to this kind of thing," Susskind said. "You all open in New York next Friday. We believe there are enough individual excellencies to warrant opening where it counts."

Susskind then nodded at Ross. "I think the producers have made an extraordinary decision," Ross said. "They are . . . we are, out of money. It will cost another $50,000 to open in New York. I can only admire them for their decision."

"Which really means," said Eileen Rodgers, "that we don't have a fighting chance."

At that several people began to talk at once, arguing with one another, their voices beginning to get loud and edgy. Almost everybody, impressed by Susskind's courage and generosity, thought Miss Rodgers unappreciative.

"Please," Susskind said, holding up his hand for silence. "I would hope this is what you want, if not . . ." He was interrupted before he could finish, everybody pressing forward to congratulate him and shake his hand.

The Ritz Hotel, the next night

Mel Brooks and Leonard Stern, the television writers from Hollywood, had arrived that afternoon from California; that evening they had seen the show for the first time. Neither of them had read the script. At 11:30, their observations scrawled on large sheets of paper or the backs of envelopes, they went up to Susskind's suite to suggest improvements.

Brooks, a small, energetic man with thinning hair, sat in a chair in front of the fireplace. Stern leaned against the mantelpiece. Taller and heavier than Brooks, wearing a goatee and elaborate gold cuff links in his silk shirt, he chewed gum and spoke with slow solemnity.

Ross, Susskind and Melnick sat at the other end of the room, like schoolboys waiting for the headmaster to decide their punishment.

"OK, you want it straight," Brooks said, "you've got a think's chance. As cloying, as horrible, and as saccharin as some of the scenes are, the audience seems to forgive."

He recommended getting rid of Ella Logan. "I didn't believe a mother's tears wouldn't work," he said, "but it doesn't. She oftenes the show. She's out there selling torn rubber raincoats."

Ross and Melnick nodded enthusiastically, looking at Susskind with expressions of triumph, reminding him of their opinion in Philadelphia.

"She's just dreadful," Ross said. "Everybody who has come from New York says she's killing the show."

"It'll be a pleasure to fire her," Melnick said.

"OK," Susskind said, "Ella's out of the show."

Brooks and Stern then proceeded to the principal weaknesses of the play. "What we are up against, fellas," Brooks said, "is grievous errors in the structure of the book; too many extraneous characters sing extraneous songs. Moose and Eddie wrote some marvellous stuff, but they only brought you to the five-yard line. No touchdown."

"The first three numbers in Act Two," Brooks said, "are the worst, seventy-five miles an hour into a stone wall. Death. Three losers back to back."

"That song," Stern said, "that awful song . . . what's the name of it?"

"Home Again," Ross said.

"Yeah, right, Home Again," Stern said. "Well, it's terrible. What should be an enchanting lyrical moment is a pedantic horror."

With these observations everybody expressed wholehearted agreement. Ross slouched deeper into his chair, peering out at Brooks through his fingers.

"You have a very incisive mind, Mel," Melnick said. "It's fabulous, Mel, fabulous."

Susskind asked if there was anything good about the play, and if so, what to do about it.

"The best thing in the show is Don Francks," Brooks said. "What you're bringing to Broadway is a new boy, a new face... Go all the way with the kid. The love for the kid is the tickets. More love, more tickets."

"The boy delivers such a strength, such power," Stern said.

Stern wanted to cut three or four songs from the score, but the producers resisted because they then would have a very short musical with little music.

"So what," Brooks said. "Light the blaze under Don Francks. A few happy moments for the tired businessman watching some girls jump around on stage, and everybody goes home at ten o'clock. They'll be glad to get the first cabs."

As of two A.M., after 11 pots of coffee and much more conversation, the producers had agreed to cut Ella Logan and to engage a songwriter to write a song replacing Home Again. This, with Miss Logan's other song, was the ninth of Charlap's 17 songs to be cut.

ACT IV

New York, a dance studio on Sixth Avenue, Monday, 25 January, noon

The squares of sunlight on the polished floor gave the room a cheerfulness inappropriate to the mood of the people present. Dispirited and resigned, they had returned from Boston in a snow-storm the day before. Nobody expected a long run in New York. Ross arrived at 12:30, his face announcing him as the bringer of dismal news.

"OK," he said. "Almost a total rewrite of the play will be available at four p.m. According to my latest information, we will open this Saturday instead of Friday. Maybe Danny and David can raise an extra $50,000. If so, we can pay for another week of rehearsal, and we will open on Saturday 6 February, but we've got to figure for the 29th."

He announced the elimination of Ella Logan, and then outlined the new play as written by Brooks and Stern. They had begun writing it that Saturday morning in Boston, and had finished late Sunday night in New York.

In it Hop Kelly had become the boy next door: fearful, sweet and shy, a kid trying to do something for his sweetheart and his dad. The new comedy routines scattered through the play depended on exchanges such as the following, between two gamblers:

First gambler: "You can't Welsh on an Englishman."

Second gambler: "Why don't you English on a Welshman?"

The cast received Ross's information with scepticism, knowing that if there was too much new material, they would not have time to learn it properly, and must therefore give shaky performances on opening night. A few of the actors also complained about the quality of the new lines.

"It's Jewish nightclub humour," somebody said.

Before any of these objections could develop into extended arguments, however, Susskind and Melnick arrived with more words of hope and assurance. They took chairs on either side of Ross.

"I hope this is our last chat," Susskind said, "but I want to tell you the facts of life. At the end of our run in Philadelphia we had used up all our money. We have had, as you know, quite a number of troubles, particularly with Moose and Eddie, who thought they had written the Holy Scripture. But I want you to know that I believe in miracles, and that I am working around the clock to raise another $50,000 so that you people can have an extra week of rehearsal. I believe that with the new script we now have a strong show."

When the producers had left, and while they waited for the new scripts, everybody talked about the departure of Ella Logan. They learned that instead of telling her themselves, the producers had instructed the stage manager to telephone her and tell her not to come to rehearsal. He thought this an abrupt way of firing a person, lacking in courage or courtesy.

"I'm a very torn-up guy," he said. "I liked that woman very much, and I wanted to do something to show how I felt about it. But she told me to forget it, that's the way it is on Broadway."

panied by her lawyer, said she had come not to testify but merely as "an interested spectator." Speaking of the producers, she said, "Amateurs, darling. Dilettantes."

Justice Samuel Gold elected to hear "the matter of Susskind" as the last case of the morning, when only Miss Logan and a few men in shabby overcoats remained on the hard wooden benches of the courtroom.

Harry J. Halperin, Susskind's attorney, moving to prevent the arbitration, began his statement by saying that his clients had invested nearly $500,000 in the play. This was his strongest argument. He reminded the judge that it was customary for authors to accept help if their plays received mixed reviews out of town.

"Even a genius must be practical, your honour," he said; "if Shakespeare were alive and behaved like Eddie Lawrence, then Richard Burton's Hamlet, one of the greatest productions of all time, but one that modified the script, could never have reached the stage."

The judge asked Edward Schlesinger, the attorney for the authors, whether the matter could not be resolved in a peaceful manner, perhaps at a meeting in his chambers.

Schlesinger shook his head.

"Opposing counsel would have us weep for the producers' plight," he said, "but it was they who created this situation, wilfully, deliberately and villainously. They want to take the play and do whatever they want with it, and we think the play will be a disaster. They are interlopers and vandals."

For several minutes Justice Gold examined the briefs presented by both attorneys, and then, addressing himself to Halperin, he said: "These people are vain about their work. They feel you'll mess it up in such a way as to make it commercially successful, but not something they wish to lend their names to. Being normal men, I'm sure they're acting according to the noblest motives their minds can conceive."

"But $500,000, if your honour please," Halperin said, gesturing desperately with his hands, "$500,000, and they want to see it down the drain."

Justice Gold said he would consider the matter and would hand down his decision in a few days. On her way out of the courthouse, Ella Logan, who was smiling, remarked on the unusually fine weather. "Almost like spring," she said. "I think I can hear birds singing."

The Broadhurst Theatre, Monday, 1 February

The despair of the previous week had given way to a new hopefulness. Susskind had borrowed another $50,000, thus delaying the opening until Saturday, 6 February. Justice Gold, although he had ordered the dispute to arbitration, had not specified an exact date, and he had denied the authors' cross-motion to prohibit the opening.

Even Melnick's wife, who had never liked the play and who had come to the dress rehearsal with serious doubts, expected a limited success.

"The jokes don't seem like insults anymore," she said.

"They're generic," Melnick said. "I think it's on the way to something terrific." He thought the smallness of the Broadhurst Theatre would contribute to the sympathetic effect.

"It's an intimate house," he said, "not much bigger than our living room."

"We should have done the play in our living room," his wife said. "It would have been cheaper."

Of all the people associated with the show, however, the most optimistic was Nat Dorfman. For several days the newspapers had been printing stories about Ella Logan's dismissal, about the lawsuit, about opening two weeks before the date originally announced. Dorfman had been fending off reporters with assurances that these apparent troubles merely foretold a more dramatic success.

"I have never told so many lies in my life," he said. But he reasoned that even the disparaging publicity must do the play some good. "The people will be surprised," he said. "They'll like it because they'll come expecting so little."

The same, five days later

The bulletin board backstage was decorated with the usual opening-night telegrams. Wandering across the stage, en route to their various dressing rooms, the members of the cast stopped to embrace and wish each other good luck. Half an hour before the curtain Ross and Melnick, both in evening clothes, came around to thank everybody for their time and trouble.

Susskind, who had suddenly become superstitious, stayed away from the theatre. On his television programme that week he had entertained a group of soothsayers, among them a palmist, an astrologer, a lady with tea leaves, a man with playing cards and a handwriting analyst. In response to his question "Will Kelly be a big, fat hit?" each of the five had consulted his respective sources and returned with the unanimous answer, "a smash."

The night before, at the last of the five days' paid previews, Susskind had been absent, eating dinner with friends at "21". Ross and Melnick believed that the show had gone especially well that night and so, for good luck, Susskind had returned to "21", where, as the opening curtain went up, he was sitting at the same table with the same friends, ordering the same meal.

In the crowd outside the theatre, jostled by arriving celebrities, Levine, tanned and healthy after his week in Jamaica, overheard a conversation between the box-office manager and 12 people who had tickets to the show that had closed the preceding week at the Broadhurst. They wanted their money back.

"So do I," said Levine.

Together with Ross, Melnick's wife and a few of his vice-presidents, Levine sat out the performance at Sardi's, the theatrical restaurant directly across the street from the theatre. Melnick watched most of the play, standing up behind the last row of seats, and loudly applauding at all appropriate moments. Whenever the strain became too severe he walked across 44th Street to Sardi's and ordered another drink. At the intermission he told Ross he had heard a conversation between a blonde girl and Jean Kerr, the playwright and wife of Walter Kerr, drama critic for the New York Herald Tribune.

"Jean Kerr is crazy about Don Francks," he said. He considered this a good omen, because he once heard a rumour that Jean Kerr exerted an influence on her husband's opinion.

Charlap and Lawrence saw the play from the balcony, Charlap holding a tape recorder and accompanied by his lawyer, Lawrence making notes on sheets of yellow paper. Ella Logan sat with friends in the orchestra.

The play went as well as it ever did. The actors and dancers gave their performances all the verve and energy at their command. Nobody dropped a line. But, although the applause sounded loud and hearty in the orchestra, where most of the people had free seats, the balcony remained ominously quiet.

While the audience drifted out of the theatre at the end of the performance, Charlap, Lawrence and Ella Logan stood on the sidewalk among friends sympathetic to their respective causes. "I could write better than this when I was eleven years old," Lawrence said. "The most shocking dialogue I've heard in the theatre in twenty years. . . . They're going to go to gaol for this."

"Cornball," Charlap said, "one of the ugliest things I ever saw, like a horse with three legs. The work of hucksters."

Sardi's, a few minutes later

Because it was Saturday, the newspaper reviews would not come out before Monday, but everybody went to Sardi's anyway, partly because it was the customary thing to do, and partly because at least they could wait for the television reviews.

The tables downstairs had been reserved for members of the company and their friends, and when each of the principal actors arrived, there were gusts of applause. At a large table near the centre of the room Levine sat with his back against a pillar, surrounded by his family, his friends and his vice-presidents. He entertained them with magic tricks, balancing forks and spoons on his forehead.

When Charlap came in, defying a tradition that forbids outcasts at such celebrations, he stopped at Levine's table and offered to shake hands.

"You still going to sue me, are you?" Levine asked.

"Yes, sir," Charlap said.

"Well, I'll tell you something, you little punk," Levine said, batting aside Charlap's hand. "I'll fight you in every court in the country, you and that crummy partner of yours."

The job of watching and then reporting the television reviews fell to Fred Segal, the man whose advertising agency had designed the posters and billboard publicity for Kelly. He had been with the production since the beginning. Although never fond of the play, he liked many of the people associated with it, and it pained him to bring unhappy reports.

"NBC thinks it's a musical by committee," he said, returning from his first trip to the television set.

Thereafter, as he continued to come downstairs with less and less hope, he walked through the room with increasing slowness. Upon his last return he sat quietly at the table for five

BARATTA

At ten years of age, Ubaldo Baratta was already dreaming of becoming a great couturier. As a very young man he left his home town of Salsomaggiore and went to Paris to study art. These were romantic but hungry years for young Baratta and, at the age of twenty, he transferred to London to perfect his cutting, a skill which was to become his forte. His studies completed, he returned to Salsomaggiore and set up in business as a women's tailor. This move proved to be a wise one since the town was a thermal spa and much frequented by the fashionable and also by members of the Italian royal family who became his clients. The opening of his atelier in Milan, however, has been the crowning achievement of his rapidly advancing career. Here he began also to specialise in men's tailoring and he is now equally well-known in both camps. Anyone who visits his fashion house in Milan will be struck by his enviable collection of paintings illustrating the history of costume through the ages, proof that those early years in Paris were not wasted.

BRONI

Gaetano Savini-Brioni is the doyen of Italy's Big Five. As a young man, he studied to be an accountant but soon discovered that what he really wanted to do was to devote himself to creating men's fashion. He was the first off the mark in 1944, immediately after the war, when he opened an atelier for men in Rome. The first six years of its existence were an uphill struggle but the turning point came when the first official fashion shows of the Italian alta moda were organised in Florence for foreign press and buyers. Brioni was chosen to represent Italian menswear. His show was a great success with the honours going to a then revolutionary silk tuxedo which caused a sensation and had orders rolling in from all parts of the globe. Since then, Brioni has widened his sphere, designing not only coats and suits but also ties, shoes, hats and knitwear.

DATTI

Handed down from father to son since 1725 without a break, this is the proud tailoring tradition of the Datti family. Two hundred and forty years of sartorial skills with each generation adding his own contribution to the inherited talent, until today when we find two members of the family simultaneously in harness, Arocole Datti and his son, Massimo. The result is a perfectly balanced blend of high level modern tailoring combined with the "brio" of youthful enthusiasm and avant garde ideas. A perfect partnership, in other words, which is reflected in the highly original, top quality models which bear the Datti label.

FRANZONI

Luciano Franzoni is the "original" among Italy's Big Five top menswear designers. The looks of this slight, quicksilver man belie a steely strength. He has the courage of his fashion convictions and has pioneered many innovations at first sight so revolutionary as to be impossible to the average conservative male. Later, he has seen these same ideas enthusiastically adopted. Franzoni founded his fashion house only in 1958, but in the few years that have followed he has packed in a wealth of activity, has sat on innumerable committees and won countless fashion prizes and awards. He has travelled thousands of miles with his fashion collections as an ambassador of Italian fashion.

LITRICO

Angelo Litrico's is a success story personified. He arrived in Rome twelve years ago from Sicily intending "just to see the sights" and then return to his native Catania where he was already a tailor in a modest way. The big city life of Rome attracted him, however, and he decided to stay and chance his luck. Within six months he succeeded in opening his own tiny atelier in Via Sicilia, just off Rome's famed Via Veneto. He has stayed faithful to his original premises ever since and you can still find him in the same small workroom where he began his great Roman adventure. Since then he has made giant strides, consolidating his position as a master tailor-designer with many prestige trips abroad. His name has become famous in many countries both for his consummate ability as well as for his striking personality. Angelo Litrico is an unforgettable figure on the Italian fashion scene.

minutes before saying anything, moodily stirring his drink.

“Monumental bore,” he said eventually, “AP.”

After that word from the Associated Press, Segal didn't bother going upstairs any more. Instead he explained his theory of Kelly as the ugly debutante. “You know what Kelly's like,” he said, “it's like an ugly awkward girl at a coming-out party she doesn't want. Her parents have bought her a new dress, hired the most expensive ballroom, taught her to sing and dance, all this in hope of impressing the right people, in this instance the New York drama critics. But the parents don't love her. They did it for reasons of their own, and that's why she's still a dumpy, awkward girl. Nobody loves her.”

The Broadhurst Theatre, Monday, 8 February

The reviews, of course, were ruinous. Norman Nadel, writing in the New York World-Telegram, exceeded even Kerr and Taubman in the harshness of his judgment.

“There is some virtuoso tuba-playing in the otherwise commonplace overture to Kelly,” he began his column, “. . . mark it well, because nothing else that's entertaining happens during the next fifty-five minutes.”

Lacking even one moderately kind adjective, which they could perhaps take out of context and use in advertisements, the producers decided that morning to close the show. They had no money to pay for another week. During the afternoon Susskind's office telephoned or sent telegrams to the cast, informing them that there would be no second performance.

At eight p.m. Susskind came to the theatre to say good-bye to the actors and dancers. Melnick did not appear. The company gathered in the first five rows of the orchestra, all of them stunned, some of them crying. “I had to see you again,” Susskind said. “You're marvellous people. I'm heartbroken. The notices bore no relation to the things that I had come to love in the show. Those were death notices.” As he talked he swayed slightly, accompanying himself with broad, circular gestures, as if trying to shape his feelings of sorrow and loss into a round ball.

“I will never forget any of you,” he said. “I will stay in this business forever. I intend to come back to this theatre and beat its brains out. We just thought we had so much going for us. If there had been only one review, even one phrase that we could have taken out of context, we would have borrowed more money to pay for ads to keep the show open, but there was nothing. I'll never know why or how . . .”

His voice weakened, subsiding into vague and helpless sounds.

Eileen Rogers cried out, “May your next show be a good one, David,” she said, “you deserve it.”

At that everybody applauded, and Susskind, smiling wanly, continued with his farewell. “One last word about Moose and Eddie,” he said. “I hope they come to their senses. I hope all this ugliness passes away in a cloud of mercy and understanding. But . . . if not . . . maybe we'll have to call on you to testify.”

Nat Dorfman, who had listened to the speech with awe in his face, was himself almost moved to tears.

“In all my days,” he said, “I have never seen a scene so beautiful as this, nothing so poignant, so true.”

McKay's Dump, Secaucus, New Jersey, four days later

Under a railroad bridge, beyond a soap factory hidden in a veil of yellow smoke, at the end of a winter road worn deep with ruts an almost illegible sign mounted in a jumble of wrecked automobiles marked the entrance to McKay's Dump. A heavy mist reduced visibility to less than thirty yards.

Randy Brooks, the stage manager, had said the sets would be burned at 10 a.m. The man at the gate, however, said he had heard nothing of any such, and besides, they didn't burn stage sets anymore. He pointed toward a road leading to the centre of the dump and said may be at the end of it somebody might know something.

Every few hundred yards along the edge of the temporary road, the old men living in makeshift shacks were lighting their morning fires. In answer to questions they, too, pointed vaguely down the road.

Where the road finally stopped, at the brink of a new excavation, a man wearing high rubber boots stood leaning against a bulldozer. He said he had broken up some stage scenery about an hour before and then had buried it in the muck. No, he said, nothing could be seen, not even the edge of a flat or a drop; he had already buried something else on top of it.

“A play, huh,” he said, “yeah, we get a lot of plays out here.”

Will whisky-wise Englishmen persist in hoarding their Crawfords even when it's Christmas?

Perish the thought! It was another matter when you had to smuggle this great Scotch out of Scotland. But no longer. Now only a Scrooge of an Englishman would deny his friends a bottle or at least a wee dram of Crawford's at Christmas-time. It is one of the good things of life. Last year over a million bottles of Crawford's were consumed in Scotland alone. This Christmas whisky-wise Englishmen will be closing the gap with a flourish. A flourish of Crawford's 'Three Star' or, better still, a fanfare of Crawford's superlative 'Five Star'—so right for special occasions.

RECOMMENDED RETAIL PRICES: "Three Star" Imp. quarts (1½ bottles) 72/- bottles 48/6, ½ bottles 25/3, ¼ bottles 12/11, Miniatures 4/10. "Five Star" bottles 52/6, ½ bottles 27/3, Miniatures 5/7

Unrivalled Masters

Antonio is the master of the Flamenco—the ritual dance of Spain, whose colourful choreography has been created by centuries-old tradition. Similarly enriched by tradition are the golden sherries of Domecq—the unrivalled masters of sherry-making, an art which they have cultivated over two hundred years. Skills inherited and perfected over generations translate the full ripe grapes of their fertile vineyards into the mellowed and matured sherries worthy of the Domecq label. Domecq sherries reflect the most refined and rewarding taste for the enjoyment of the connoisseur and the delight of everyone.

Sports Choice

Liverpool's centre-forward Ian St John (centre) misses a shot at Chelsea's open goal. It happened at the Birmingham ground in March, when Liverpool beat Chelsea in the FA Cup semi-final, and went on to win the Cup. The teams meet again at Stamford Bridge on Saturday in a League match (see below)

ASSOCIATION FOOTBALL

First Division: Arsenal v Aston Villa, Highbury Stadium, Sat 3 p.m. (Piccadilly Line to Arsenal)

Chelsea v Liverpool, Stamford Bridge, Sat 3 p.m. (District Line to Fulham Broadway. Buses 11 14). London's match of the day. Last season's F.A. Cup winners, Liverpool, this season aim for the League championship. Chelsea are just one of the clubs in the way. Liverpool's travelling supporters are the most musical in the League

Second Division: Charlton Athletic v Southampton, The Valley, Sat 3 p.m. (Train Victoria to Charlton)

Crystal Palace v. Cardiff City, Selhurst Park, Sat 3 p.m. (Train Victoria to Thornton Heath)

FA CUP SECOND ROUND

Queen's Park Rangers v Guildford City, Loftus Road, 3 p.m. (Metropolitan Line to Shepherd's Bush. Central Line to White City)

Wimbledon v Folkestone, Plough Lane, 3 p.m. (District Line to Wimbledon. Train Waterloo to Wimbledon). Last round of the Cup before the big clubs enter. Non-League Folkestone were the giant killers of the last round when they beat Third Division Gillingham

RUGBY UNION

Harlequins v Blackheath (Stoop Memorial Match), Twickenham, Sat 2.30 p.m. (District Line to Richmond, then bus 73. Train Waterloo to Twickenham)

London Welsh v Aberavon, Richmond Old Deer Park, Sat 2.30 p.m. (District Line to Richmond). London Welsh currently carrying all before them at Richmond take on tough club from Wales

Richmond v London Irish, Richmond Athletic Ground, Sat 2.30 p.m. (District Line to Richmond).

Successful Richmond should inflict big defeat on unsuccessful London Irish

Wasps v Rosslyn Park, Sudbury, Sat 2.30 p.m. (Piccadilly Line to Sudbury Town)

Varsity Match: Oxford University v Cambridge University, Twickenham, Tues 2.15 p.m. (District Line to Richmond then bus 73. Train Waterloo to Twickenham). Cambridge have been getting far better results than Oxford this season, but somehow form does not seem to matter in this clash.

Surrey v Middlesex, Wed 2.30 p.m., Richmond Old Deer Park (District Line to Richmond)

RACING

Steeplechasing: Lingfield Park, Sat. Race of the day: The Ashdown Handicap Chase over 2½ miles. Entries include champion novice Dunkirk plus challengers Irish Imp and Rondelettes. Dunkirk will probably not run, but his trainer Peter Cazalet has five horses entered

Warwick, Mon 12.30

Plumpton, Wed 1.0

Wincanton, Thur 1.0

Sandown Park, Fri 12.15

BADMINTON

English National Championships, Thur 5 p.m., Fri 2 p.m., Wimbledon (District Line to Wimbledon. Train Waterloo to Wimbledon). Britain's best badminton players on show

Angela Bairstow playing in the All-England Badminton Championships this year. The English National event takes place next week (see bottom left)

PIGEON SHOW

"The People" Show, Royal Horticultural New Hall, Westminster, Sat 10 a.m.-7 p.m. (District Line to Victoria or St James's)

MOTOR CYCLING

Scramble of the Year, Brands Hatch, Sun, midday (trains Victoria to Swanley 14 mins past hour)

GREYHOUND RACING

White City, Sat and Thurs 7.30 p.m. (Central Line to White City) Wimbledon, Fri and Wed 7.45 p.m. (District Line Wimbledon). Good restaurant

Wembley, Mon. Final of the Classic Pretential Stakes. 520 yds. Prospective champions of next year race it out. A good race to spot future Classic winners. 7.45 p.m. Also Fri 7.45 p.m. (Bakerloo Line to Wembley Park). Good restaurant

Stamford Bridge, Sat 6.15 p.m., Thurs 2.30 p.m. (District Line Fulham Broadway. Buses: 11 14)

Walthamstow, Sat and Tues 7.45 p.m. (Buses 34 58 144 to Crooked Billet then short walk)

Park Royal, Mon and Fri 2.30 p.m. (Bakerloo Line Harlesden then bus 12)

Hendon, Mon and Fri 7.45 p.m. (Northern Line Brent)

RICHARD HENNESSY: 1724—1800

What is a colourful character, Richard Hennessy, doing in the company of these great Frenchmen?

Your clue lies in Cognac

Captain Richard Hennessy was an Irish soldier of fortune. When he left the service of the King of France he settled in the district of Cognac before Napoleon was born. Not to retire on his laurels but to set up business as a distiller of brandy.

His aim was simple: to produce the finest cognac brandy in the world.

Success was swift. Connoisseurs talked of the Hennessy standard (a degree of excellence that has not changed in 200 years).

And France was honoured by his name.

Take Hennessy VSOP Reserve.

Here is no ordinary brandy, but a liqueur cognac at its superlative best. Smooth and mellow with a special quality that owes its exclusiveness to a unique blend of fine old Hennessy brandies.

You'll appreciate Hennessy VSOP Reserve. It's an experience you'll enjoy repeating.

TIO PEPE

SHERRY

WHY ONLY FIVE?

Is there a greater variety? Yes, but these are the main types. Left to Right FINO — AMONTILLADO — OLOROSO CREAM — BROWN — Generally, sherry becomes sweeter with colour.

Look for this label

First World Famous TIO PEPE, light and dry, crisp and cool, Spain's favourite long before SHERRY was fashion in Britain. Then we produce, mature and blend Branded SHERRY of every style. So whatever your choice—you will be known for your taste—if you buy GONZALEZ BYASS
